At the present time, when the policy of the American foreign office is known nothing could have suited the English better than to see American sailors rescue the prisoners, English and American both, and possibly bombard the town, and in such a way accomplish two purposes, that is, the libera-tion of the English subjects in the hands of the Spaniards and the collapse of the American canal scheme in Central America. This may be considered the truest explanatiod of why the English captain left Blue-fields at the most critical time, while pretending to be on the lookout to intercept the prisoners should an attempt be made to take them to Greytown, when he could have ac-
