PEINCE BISMARCK

The Illness of the German Chancellor-Reflection on State Affairs. The July number of the European Mes senger, one of the most reputable of Rus sian magazines, and one which has generally written of German affairs in a friendly and sympathetic tone, contains the following interesting reflections on the German chancellor.

To follow the withered and benumbed political life of modern Germany takes us into an atmosphere almost reminding one of the oppressive air of an hospital. The great chancellor has been long ailing, and his illness is reflected in the domestic state of the empire, as is lalways the case with a system of purely personal govern ment. It is long since he cat himself adrif from the majority of the upper and educated classes in Germany, without completely identifying himself with the mass of the working people, but revertheless he firmly clings to his post, without troubling himself about the ever-increasing number of his foes. He will not let the helm pass out of his own nervous hands, and so the ship of state moves heavily and with effort, sometimes remaining quite still, and again swiftly drifting to the rear. Prince Bismarck no longer trusts anyone; he relies upon himself and upon the obsequious ex-ecutors of his will, as if unconscious that confidence is no longer reposed in himself, that his own strength is failing him, that age is beginning to assert its right, and that without strenuous public co-operation he is no longer equal to tasks that are ever becoming more complicated. Around himself he has created an artificial solitude; he has he has created an artificial solitude; he has dismissed his best and most independent assistants, and is now left with devoted nonentities. He has repulsed all those who made no secrets of their independent opinions and drew his attention to pendent opinions and drew his attention to the possible errors of his ways. He has no worthy helper, and he has trained no suc-cessor. Parliament, as the legal expression of the popular will, he has converted into powerless instrument that has no real influence on actual affairs. The talented men and the energetic characters have all gradually quitted the ungrateful arena of public life. Prince Bismarck has apparently achieved his aim; he has annihilated or paralyzed all opposition to his personal policy, but, at the same time, has also paralyzed the life which this policy was meant alyzed the life which this policy was meant to serve. While seeking to free himself from the apparent inconveniences of a public opposition, he has evoked against himself real aversion among the most honest elements of public life in Germany. To escape the necessity of reckoning with the wishes of the people, he had obstructed the regular course of legislative business, and based his own schemes on combinations as temporary and tottering as they are arbitemporary and tottering as they are arbi-trary. In order to weaken parliamentary control he has overthrown the only party on whose help he could have counted, and which in the first few years after the founda-tion of the empire rendered him so many solid services. What has the German chancellor gained, and what could he gain, from all this confusion into which he had thrown the domestic affairs which he had thrown the domestic abairs of the German people? Preferring to act upon his own personal convictions, instead of according to the views and feelings of the whole nation, Prince Bismarck has thus infringed one of the main conditions of normal political progress. Where the affairs and interests of many millions of mean expectaged nothing enduring can

The state will receive an abnormal and harmful direction, if its inwas found to be a skipper. terests, which concern the future no less than the present, are subject to the limits and "lecturer the other day, in descanting and "lecturer the other day," lecturer the other day, in descanting and "lecturer the other day," lecturer the other day, in descanting and "lecturer the other day," lecturer the other day, in descanting and "lecturer the other day," lecturer the other day, in descanting and "lecturer the other day," lecturer the other day, in descanting and "lecturer the other day," lecturer the other day, in descanting and "lecturer the other day," lecturer the other day, in descanting and "lecturer the other day," lecturer the other day, in descanting and "lecturer the other day," lecturer the other day, in descanting and "lecturer the other day," lecturer the other day, in descanting and "lecturer the other day," lecturer the other day, in descanting and "lecturer the other day," lecturer the other day, in descanting and "lecturer the other day," lecturer the other day in descanting and "lecturer the other day," lecturer the other day in descanting and "lecturer the other day," lecturer the other day in descanting and "lecturer the other day," lecturer the other day in day and "lecturer the other day" lecturer the other day and "lecturer the other of transitory personal impressions without any connection with the mind of the whole nation. This personal policy is not bearing its intended fruits. The affairs of Germany are passing into the hands of zealous no-bodies, and are monopolized in the press by a crew of flatterers and hypocrites. How long such an abnormal state of things is to continue it would be difficult to say. In present circums'ances, that will always depend on the health and temper of the chancellor, with whom the aged emperor will hardly part as long as he lives.

An Old Montreal Landmark Going From the Montreal Witness

For further proof let a single instance be cited : A few weeks ago an honest-looking and plain-spoken man asked a New street The quaint charms of our French Canafirm, whom we will call Sharp & Sharpless dian villages are fast giving way to mode n to open a stock account with him. He re ugliness. A very painful example of this is presented himself to be in the grocery the approaching removal of one of the most trade in Harlem. He appeared like a attractive landmarks on all the St. Law-Harlem groceryman, honest, simple and rence, the old church of Varennes, whose rence, the old church of Varennee, whose glittering spires have for just 100 years glorified the evening landscape as seen from the higher parts of Montreal. It is a very picturesque pite indeed as viewed especially from behind, as are likewise the old wooden buildings attached to it. Is there not land enough in Canada on which to build our new buildings without removing our few relics of the past? We are told that the new church is going to cost an enormous sum and to crush the taxpayers most grievstraightforward. Nevertbeless, he was repulsed, as he was a stranger and without references. Finally, however, he succeeded in having Sharp & Sharpless sell for him a marketable bond. The avails of the sale were given him in a check on the bank of (let us say) International Commerce. The honest groceryman went away with the check, and, after a week or two had passed, reappeared, and with some reasonable ex-planation, asked that the check be cashed sum and to crush the taxpayers most grieveously. This form of taxation must do much for him. This was done and the customer departed, apparently well satisfied.

Having established, by various visits, a temporary understanding with Sharp & to retard the progress of the French Canadian communities. It is the more to be regretted as the new buildings are generallo less tasteful than the old. If the new Sharpless, the honest groceryman found no church at Varennes is to be built in the difficulty, a few days after the cashing of taste of the ecclesiastical buildings already erected there, the longer it is in building his check, in obtaining permission from Sharp & Sharpless to use their telephone to inquire of the Pacific Mail Steamship company, foot of Canal street, as to the arrival of a steamer then one.
