CORRESPONDENCES.

Editor Military Gazette,

Sir,-I would just like to put in your paper a querry published in the Volunteer Record:

Can any of your numerous readers inform me what are the advantages of the pouch now worn on the back of the shoulder belts by officers of rifle regiments? It is unsafe for despatches, and too small for surgeons, or any one else, to carry anything useful in.

Why not have the pouch made a trifle larger and thus enable the wearer to carry a small field glass? This would be not only ornamental but useful, as owing to the introduction of smokeless powder and longer ranges for rifles, etc., it is difficult at times to locate the enemy.

Yours truly,

POUCH CAPTAIN.

A Preference for a Militia Decoration Editor Military Gazette,

Sir,-I noticed in the public press some days ago, that the "Volunteer Service Decoration" was to be given to the militia of Canada. I am at a loss to understand why the militia of Canada should receive a decoration which is given solely to volunteers in England, and which is not applicable to the English militia. The "Volunteer Service Decoration" is given to volunteer officers, who have served 20 years as officers in the volunteers. If the Royal Warrant is amended making colonial volunteers eligible for the honor, the question may then arise as to whother officers in the Canadian mili in are eligible as volunteer officers or not. The volunteer force in England is a purely volunteer force and in no respect like the militia of Canada. The volunteers are armed by Government but receive no pay or clothing; they cannot be called out in aid of the civil power; are not under military law-even when at drill (except under the exceptional circumstances of being brigaded with regular troops and then only for such time); they cannot be orflered out of England-even in case of war, and can only be embodied in case of war to repel the enemy from England; their drill halls are owned by the corps and not by Government. Whilst the militla of Canada (there are no volunteers in Canada) are paid and clothed by Government; they are under military law when ordered for service; when in uniform, whether attending drill or otherwise; they may be called out in aid of the civil power; in time of war or insurrection and are enlisted to serve "within or without Canada," consequently may be ordered out and sent to any part of the world. In this latter respect differing from the militia of England, who cannot be ordered out of the United Kingdom, even in time of Where, then, is the similarity between the volunteers of England and the militia of Canada, that the Volunteer Service Decoration should be extended to the militia of Canada? For years the militia officers and militia corps of the better class have been striving to bring the militia above the volunteer level and make them something like what they should be. But if the "Volunteer Service Decoration"
