

A most interesting article for those who have Canadian literary progress at heart has been contributed by Dr. A. H. U. Colquhoun, Deputy Minister of Education, to "The Canadian Magazine" on the attainment of its twenty-first year of publication. He pays a tribute to the management of "The Canadian Magazine" for "patient courage under the thousand natural shocks every publication is heir to, and a patriotic spirit that has never quailed."—The Toronto World.

The completion of twenty-one years of continuous publication of "The Canadian Magazine" is an interesting event in the literary history of the Dominion. The February number celebrates this anniversary with an excellent table of contents, among which is an article by Dr. A. H. U. Colquhoun, Deputy Minister of Education for Ontario, appreciative of the progress made by "The Canadian Magazine" against great odds during its twenty-one years of existence. No other magazine in Canada has ever been able to attain its "majority," or even to come near it, so that the mere fact that one literary publication has been able to do so is of special interest.—The Montreal Star.
