And I will demonstrate to you that my Inhaler is the most rational and the most successful remedy for Catarrh, Asthma, Bronchitis, and all Throat and Lung Troubles ever placed before the public.—MUNYON.

Sir Alexander Crichton, the great English authority, says: "Consumption cannot be cured by medicines which act through the stomach." Neither can Catarrh, Asthma, Bronchitis or any disease of the air passages. The only sensible, rational, up-to-date and successful method of treating these diseases is by medicated air.

Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper, who pointed out that even imperial ministers could not hold their positions long if such a principle was admitted. As to the retarding of the country and the injury to the good name of the Dominion—the sooner the opposition realize the unwisdom of further reference to these matters in the light of their own reckless policy, the better for their reputation for sanity.

REVIVALISTS SAY FAREWELL

Evangelist Ostrom Gives Some Pithy Parting Advice.

The revival services which have been in progress for three weeks at the First Methodist Church were brought to a close last night. Evangelist H. Ostrom and John O. Hills, the singer, left today for Chatham. The farewell meeting was largely attended. Rev. Dr. Smith spoke highly of the great value of the services.

Mr. Ostrom thanked the pastor, the choir, and the organist, for their helpfulness during the meetings. Mr. Ostrom would have liked to remain longer, because the devil is here, and requires to be driven out. Some of the evangelist's most pithy sayings were: "You know something of the sweet lessons from the humble cottages of the poor," he said. "It is not the worst thing in the world to be poor. The worst thing is to be a sinner."

"There is a certain tenderness in poor people. Now and again a man with wealth recognizes stewardship, but you know the majority of the rich men cannot stand it." "If to be a Christian should always make you poor, you know you do not lose everything by it." "It is not the worst thing in the world to be penniless. It is the worst thing to be Christless." "You may better go home tonight, go to bed and suffer torture for forty years, than to remain of good physique and live in sin."

"Men might better go to prison with Jesus than to be at large without him. It is not the worst thing in the world to go to jail. It is the worst thing to be a sinner."

ADVERTISE IN THE ADVERTISER

THE WEEK AT OTTAWA

A Retrospect of the Yukon Debate.

Sir Hibbert Tupper's Creed of Anonymity—Mr. Sifton's Great Effort.

Ottawa, April 8.—The political event of the week has been the speech of the minister of the interior in the House of Commons, in reply to Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper's extraordinary harangue of last week against the government generally, and the department of the minister of the interior very particularly, in connection with their administration of the Yukon goldfield. Both speeches will live in the parliamentary annals of Canada, but for very different reasons: That of the ex-minister of justice will long hold the record awarded by Mr. Sifton, when he remarked: "I shall be in the judgment of this house and of the country when I say that there has never been a speech delivered by a responsible member of the house, an ex-minister of the crown, and a privy councillor, which has contained so many untrue statements." Mr. Sifton's own speech in explanation and vindication of the policy which has been followed by his department, bristled with facts, overflows with clear-cut, unequivocal statements, supported and amplified by documentary evidence, and annotated throughout by names and date, held the attention of the house unwearyingly throughout the five hours and a half that it took to deliver, and when read by the country side by side with Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper's remarkable diatribe, the electorate from Halifax to Victoria will have little difficulty in estimating each at its true value.

A SIGNIFICANT SOBRIQUET.

It was a tedious task imposed upon the minister of the interior, that of wading through the mass of verbiage, and picking out such statements as were definite enough to be specifically answered, and then searching through the mass of departmental correspondence to ascertain what the facts really were, that these might be placed before the house side by side with the fantastic stories of the imaginative and apparently somewhat glib member for Pictou. Mr. Sifton has been derisively dubbed by his opponents "the young Napoleon of the administration." Listening to his marvelous handling of his forces, noting the consummate skill with which he discovered the weak points in the enemy's line of attack, and turned their flank, observing the accuracy and deadliness of his aim when he turned his guns upon the opposition battlements, the conviction was irresistibly forced upon one that the sobriquet had far more substance and meaning than its originators ever intended or expected.

AS INDEFINITE AS EVER.

What were the charges, so long threatened, and at last produced, with such flourish of trumpets? The same old stories, the identical allegations, the anonymous miner's grievances, the shadowy prospector's indefinite assertions. There might be some small excuse, though mighty small, for newspapers to give currency to the and aimless ravings of disappointed adventurers, but for a prominent member of parliament, after months of inquiry and preparation, to offer nothing more definite or tangible, not a single new name or date that would identify the scores of hearsay rumors, so long doing duty in the absence of anything more substantial to base the "scandals," is—to say the least—distinctly disappointing.

Moreover, the spirit with which the ex-minister of justice approached the subject, and the tone he adopted in presenting so extremely grave a matter to the house, was distinctly disappointing. Vague enough at the start, no sooner was a statement challenged, and declared he said something else, or, at any rate, he meant something else. I have only room for one instance of this: Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper declared that (I quote from Hansard) "A heeler and friend of theirs [the government], also a member of the bar, was a sole in this city of Vancouver to charge and collect a fee of $500 because he was able by telegram and by letter to obtain from the minister of the interior a permit for his clients to send liquor into the Yukon."

A SAMPLE OF THE "CHARGES."

This assertion, indefinite though it was, and it was intentionally indefinite, that a straight denial might be impossible, was so promptly and unflinchingly denied that it took the assenter's breath away, though he recovered sufficiently to make the coarse remark, "I am not surprised at the minister of the interior making such a statement, because it is absolutely impossible that it is true or not." But Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper had reckoned without his host. It was possible for the minister to know that there was no truth in the statement, for there was no permit had been granted to anyone at any time, through the intercession of such party or parties described in the assertion of the member for Pictou. Then that honorable gentleman promptly shifted his ground and declared that he had said there was no Liberal in the house who believed that a fee of $500 could be obtained for "the simple service of telegraphing a request to the minister of the interior for a liquor permit." This is the amended allegation—totally different from the original one—and even opponents of the opposition—and even opponents of the opposition—held not refrain from pity at the spectacle of its responsible leaders making so sorry an exhibition of themselves.

A SUMMARY OF THE INDICTMENT.

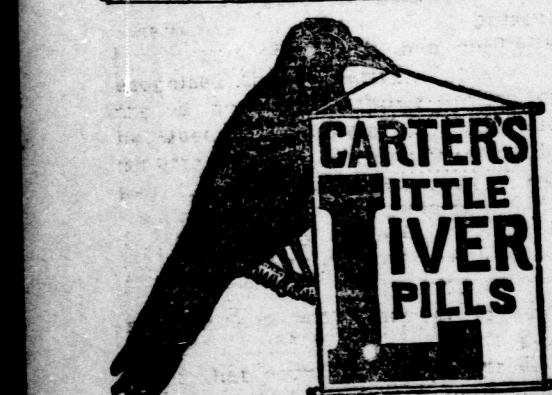

It is not possible within the limits of this letter to go over the wide area covered by the debate upon this question. The charges may be briefly summarized thus: That the government marred thus: That the government totally inadequate to the needs of the case; that the officials were appointed for their services, and without regard to the qualifications, and as a result they had proved incapable and crooked; that the government should have known all this, and must be held responsible for it; and that the development of the Yukon is retarded because of all this, and the fair name of Canada sullied on account of the "scandals" which have resulted.

With a patience and physical endurance which astonished his hearers, and with a thoroughness and conclusiveness which convinced every reasonable man on both sides of the house, and will with equal certainty convince the country, the minister of the interior took up the charges seriatim and answered them. He gave the history of the country from the hour he assumed control of its administration, showed how events had crowded in upon one another and developments occurred which no one could possibly anticipate, so that action which was perfectly unavoidable at one time might have been unavoidable had it been possible to look ahead a couple of weeks.

THE OFFICIALS AND THEIR RECORDS.

He gave the record of each official appointed, showed that in every case there were special qualifications of fitness, and justified his action in the matter so thoroughly that one is not surprised to note the opposition criticism that he dealt with the matter "at tiresome length." It certainly is "tiresome" to be so convincingly answered. Continuing, Mr. Sifton called attention to the fact that the principal appointments were warmly commended by the Conservative press at the time they were made, and that if the wrongdoing had occurred the culprits had gone back on all their previous records for uprightness and probity.

Responsibility for the conduct of the officials, the minister quoted from Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper's speech: "I charge more against the minister of the interior—the responsibility for all I am going to say." He cannot in fairness shelter himself behind their (the officials') misconduct; he stands primarily charged with all the rascality and all the nefarious conduct of these men." This sounds well, of course, but unfortunately for Sir Hibbert, he has placed himself on record as holding very different views under different conditions. Quoting from the Hansard of 1895, Mr. Sifton gave the same gentleman's opinion when the Conservative ministers of that day were charged with the responsibility of the notorious boodling going on under their very noses in this city and in Montreal. Then the idea was laughed to scorn by
