THE CZECHO-SLOVAKS

(Halifax Chronicle).
Who are the Czechs-Slovaks, the troops so frequently mentioned in despatches relating to Siberia? They are composed, as a writer in the Boston Transcript states, very largely of Austrian forces which surrendered freely to the Russian General Brusilov in the great offensive in 1917, and which were sent to Russian prisons beyond the Urals. Their strength was originally 90,000, but since has been increased to 200,000. When the Russian revolution broke out they were liberated from prison and began their march eastward for the avowed purpose of fighting alongside the Entente Allies against the Germans. The Czechs people inhabit Bohemia, Moravia and Austrian Silesia, which under the present constitution are crown lands of the Austrian empire, and lie between Austria proper on the south and the German empire—Bavaria on the west, Saxony on the north, and Prussian Silesia on the east. The Slovaks live in the upper regions of Hungary, adjoining the Czechs to the east and southeast. The two peoples are in effect the same race, their language has only slight dialectal differences; the political division between them was created only in 1867, when to divide the energies of the people the Slovaks were put under Hungarian rule. Czechs and Slovaks have worked together with absolute harmony for unity and independence. The Czechs are one of the most highly civilized peoples in the world, and economically the most prosperous in the Austrian Empire. Their country includes most of the coal and iron deposits of the empire, the principal manufactures and the most prosperous agricultural districts. The Slovaks have been held back by Magyar repression but elsewhere, as in the United States, have shown that their natural capacity is as great as that of the Czechs. The area of the Czech countries is about 30,000 square miles, and of the Slovak region 15,000. It is estimated that there are approximately 3,000,000 Czechs and 3,000,000 Slovaks in the two countries. In addition there are more than 2,000,000 Czechs and Slovaks in the United States.
