clapped and cheered and were loud in their appreciation. This is a good picture. (I know I said this before this week, but it has been true in both cases).

The Great Secret is getting very interesting. It grows on one, and I, personally, like it better and better. The women all think Francis X. Bushman is just great and the men all make fun of him (but that's because they are jealous of his good looks). By the look of his muscles, of which we are given a fine view in this episode, I don't think many would venture to make fun of that same Francis to his face. There is humor in the atory and it ends with a fine hangeron.

dent which I witnessed the other day has helped to mature my plans a little. Whilst looking from a window of a nouse where I was residing, I noticed a little dog, which had been running shout quite awhile, suddenly dashed upon a small bird, and before anyone ould interfere, had bitten the bird, and made off again. A little girl tenderly licked up the injured creature, and was trying to revive it when I went down stairs, to see what could be done. Taking it into the house we sently laid it on some cotton wool, but after a few minutes, the eyes closed, and with a little gasp it expired. Doggie had done his wicked work well. That little incident shows that there are many dangers to which the binds are exposed in the summer as well as when the land is wrapped in a mantie of white. It is these dangers which floys and dirits might be able to assist the birds to escape from.

My plan is this: Would it be possible to form a Bird Protecting Stociety in connection with the Children's Corner? There are hundreds of members, now away in the country who would be able to do splendid work in organizing such a society, so that such a clue might be run on propar lines. Of course I know many of you are already kept very busy in patriotic work, whilst others are consected with bird societies in the store by our work if a bird society was formed in connection with the Corner.

Uncle Duck

There was once a boy who thought that he could have the best time in the world if only he did not have to to go to school. The birds and the squir has played all day. Why must he sit on a hard wooden seat and work. It little mistakes in figures could not do very much harm. Suppose he did pspell two, "too" and little with one "t" finobody but the teacher would care. There did not seem to be much use in learning about towns and rivers that he had never seen or in writing quite so well as the words looked in his copy book.

So he made up his mind to take trinings into his own hands. If the law
