house and found a large back room on the fourth floor of an old residence, half a block from Fifth avenue on Thirty-third street. The basement and first two floors were given up to business and the third and fourth floors were occupied as living quarters for the people below. There was an elevator installed so I knew being on the top floor made no difference.

"The large room had two windows and there was an alcove with one window, one large clothes closet and another closet with running water. The rent was twenty dollars, and I took a year's lease, with the privilege of renewal. I sent for my box, packed three years before when I had left the west. The first thing I bought was a new bed, good springs and mattress. I scoured second-hand stores until I found all the tables and chairs that I needed, I bought an old bureau and painted it white and a small chair and table and these were all put in the alcove. Gradually the place was furnished and with what was in my box, I spent just $37.50, and that included the paint remover and paint and varnish that I used on the old things I bought. I had a telephone put in after the first six months. I cooked every meal I ate there and had good wholesome food, better by far than any since I came to the city. Business was slow for the first few months and then gradually I became known among playwrights and theatrical managers and authors, until now I employ two girls all the time on a very high grade of work, and am a regular contributor to four well known magazines, besides some work that I do for syndicates."

"In the meantime that small boy has finished high school and has another year after this to finish his course in the state University in electrical engineering. He is a man now, about ready to take the helm."

"May I tell you of my plan for a vacation as soon as the boy finishes his University course? The school year closes about the middle of June and I hope to have saved enough by that time to enable us to start on a little tour that has long seemed possible to me, and not at all impractical. I shall turn my stenographic business over to the girl who has served me the longest. She may come and live here if she chooses and the only stipulation will be that she take as good care of things as I have and if I ever need them that I may share them with her. I shall have the boy come here and we will sail for Liverpool in June and from there I am going just as far around the world as the money I have saved will take me, with what I hope to earn by writing as I have done for some years past. The boy has studied German and has been able to live in a German family for two years; for four years I have studied French at night school, and have been fortunate in finding a French woman who would talk to me whenever I went to see her, I have spent two evenings a week with her for over two years."

"My expenses have never been over forty dollars a month. I have always had just enough clothes and no more and I never wear anything that has a decided style." The truth of this was borne out by the gown Miss Leonard had on. It was a soft grey cashmere made in a modified empire style, trimmed in bands of oriental embroidery. With it she wore an old-fashioned brooch and it was the only ornament she had on. It was a gown that would be never be counted stylish, but was wonderfully artistic and graceful."

"I do practically all my own cooking and you know how much one can save by that. I do not waste any time when I work. You know I said at first it was waste that made people poor, and I repeat it. I have five thousand dollars saved in the bank, and have kept myself and the boy entirely without financial aid, with the exception of the six hundred we started out with."

"Miss Bacheller, you are wholly responsible for my being the topic of our conversation in reply to your question as to my advice to girls; I scarcely know what to say. But I believe if a girl marries and makes a good wife and mother she has done well. But if that portion does not fall to a girl, let her learn to do well in some one thing. She will be better equipped to take care of herself if she has been taught home duties. Then they must learn not to waste time and material things. They must learn to be honest in all business deals. They must learn how to dress. They must be willing to take advantage of opportunities that come to them to gain knowledge. They must learn that knowledge of all kinds is valuable if they will make it so. They must learn to respect work and workers. Girls as a rule do not choose their friends wisely. And above all, every girl should put enough good big wholesome interest into her work to give her a little perspective on her life."

"I have a book here that I am very fond of, in fact it is the book I live by, or try to, rather. I have put in it many things my mother used to say to me, there are things from the Bible, Emerson, Thoreau, Stevenson and many others who have given me wonderful help, and that dear old man, John Burroughs has offered me peace in his wonderful little poem, 'Waiting.'"

On The Ferryboat.

'Twas just an average little boy
Of six or thereabouts;
I left him full of picnic, and
He left me full of doubts.

He ate bananas, sandwiches,
Sweet pickles, cake and jam,
Fried chicken and potato chips,
Ice cream and tea and ham.

To these he added pink pop corn
And quarts of lemonade;
Of what, then, was his little tum
So wonderfully made?

With bated breath I watched that child
Expecting him to burst,
But presently, though still I gazed
I ceased to fear the worst.

For after endless candy from
A green and sticky heap,
That satiated infant sighed and yawned,
Then, smiling, fell asleep!
