

can be turned to peaceful pursuits. Here are displayed the skill of Canadian Labour, the ingenuity of Canadian industry, the advances in industrial processes applied to the field, the forest, the mine and the factory, as well as in communications, and in transport by sea, land and air. Is there not in all this, something to turn the minds of other nations from the pursuit of war to the arts and blessings of peace?

The Exhibition is, however, more than a display of the wares of merchants, and of the expansion of trade and commerce. It is also a display of achievements in the arts and in the sciences. It speaks, moreover, of a form of enjoyment to which millions of persons, young and old, may come for relaxation and diversion from their daily tasks to share innocent amusements and inspiring entertainment. Here, all may see some contribution which each may make to human well-being and happiness.

Finally, and perhaps most important of all, the Exhibition affords a vivid illustration of our Canadian way of life. More may be seen here in a day than might be learned from books in a month. The Exhibition draws visitors, not only from all parts of Canada but as well, and increasingly, from other countries. Few things are so desirable, in the promotion of peace.
