Anderson, Commander of the southern party who reported that the Karluk did not reach Herschel Island and was last seen off Flaxman Island about August 24th. This telegram was dated November 1 and 11, and was sent in Collinson Point, Alaska. He read:

"Canada Arctic expedition, schooners Alaska and Mary Sachs, wintering at Collinson Point, Alaska. Heaviest ice conditions in recent years, prevent further advance eastward. Scientific staff, R. M. Anderson, commander; Chipman, Cox, Johnsen, O'Neil. Balance of southern party on board the Karluk. Karluk did not reach Herschel Island. Last seen off Flaxman Island about August 14. No ships able to get east of Demarcation Point this year. Whaler Flavin crushed and sank off Humphreys Point, September 23. Belvedere caught off Ice Reef, but apparently safe. A letter follows."

(Signed) R. M. ANDERSON. So far this letter has not reached the department. The last word to be received from Stefansson was early in August. It was a telegram from Nome, Alaska, giving an account of this sailing from Port Clarence. On July 27, the Karluk got separated in a storm from the companion ship Sachs at Keotzebue. The whereabouts of the Sachs was unknown. Stefansson stated that the Karluk had behaved well in a heavy storm and rounded Point Hope on the 31st of July. They met ice near Ice Cape. The Karluk worked satisfactorily. The whole day of August 1, they set fast in the ice, early in August, thirty miles west of Barrow. They worked out within the next few days and reached Barrow, the northern-most point of Alaska.

Those on the Trip. Those supposed to be on the Karluk are:

V. Stefansson, commander; George Malloch, of Ottawa, chief geologist and topographer; Alister Forbes Mackay, of Edinburgh, Scotland, surgeon; B. M. McConnell, Meteorologist and assistant to Stefansson, Los Angeles; Bjarne Mamen, assistant geologist, Christiania, Norway; James Murray, geologist, Glasgow, Scotland; Henri Buchhat, anthropologist, who was to have been with the southern party, but remained on the Karluk; Dr. Jenness, Wellington, N.Z., assistant anthropologist; W. L. McKinley, of Glasgow, Scotland, expert in terrestrial magnetism; Burt M. Wilkins, photographer; Captain R. A. Barlett, captain of the Karluk.

Those safe on board the Alaska with southern expedition: R. M. Anderson, commander of the southern party, Kenneth Crippman, Ottawa, geologist; John R. Cox McGill University, assistant topographer; D. Johansen, biologist; J. O'Neil, Ottawa, geologist.

Those with the south party will pass the winter at Port Collinson, where the two ships Alaska and Sachs are located. The latter was taken along to carry the additional provisions.

Wreckage From Hydrus

is completed the boats will thus have traversed four strips of water, each six miles in width, of that part of the lake which is not travelled by the regular stamers. Farther than 22 miles out the lake is well covered by the ships bound up and down between Sarnia and the Sault.

After the Kettle Point excursion the patrol boats will turn their noses north from there and scan the waters as far as Southampton. At the latter port they will hire a fishing tug whose captain is familiar with the tortuous channels at the entrance to the Georgian Bay, and under his direction all the landlocked waters of that district will be scrutinized.

Nothing has been found from the Isaac M. Scott, of Cleveland, and experienced mariners are of the opinion that if the ship foundered in deep water trace of the Scott never may be obtained.

Great expectations are held by Captain Whitney, of the Lake Carriers, and Captain McNab, of the Government boat, with regard to those forthcoming trips. They believe that the south-west wind which prevailed last yesterday will blow many bodies inshore from midlake, and that these can be found without difficulty as soon as the breeze dies down.

The accidental identification of a body from the Carruthers at the undertaker's here as that of J. Rooney, of Harrison, New Jersey, leads to the presumption that one man at least of those reported missing from the steamer was on board at the time of the disaster. Rooney's name does not appear on the board's payroll, so that he evidently took the place of a man who had left before the storm.

Rooney's body was identified by a purse which fell out of the clothing of the deceased, and the corpse was being transferred from one room to another at the undertaker's. The purse, which had not been found in previous examinations, bore his name and address, and instructions were sent to the headquarters of the Lake Carriers to seek out and notify the man's relatives at Harrison.

Yesterday afternoon the body of John Thompson was identified by his father, 424 John Street north, Hamilton. His body will be sent to Hamilton early in the morning.
