If I would be a noble man I cannot, must not drink; Or far from purity and truth
I shall for ever shrink. If I would be a useful man

I cannot, must not drink;
For will the idler drinking make
Be helpful, do you think? If I would be a Christian man I cannot, must not drink;

Behold the wretched drunkard no

Trembling on ruin's brink.

No; if I would be pure and good, And holy, true, and wise, I must not touch the poison-cup, 'Tis death in any guise.

Beyond the Veil.

Why dread the clouds that hide the sur When poets say that every one
Has got a "sulver lining!"
And if the melting god of day
Should shine in one unbroken ray,
We mortals in our thankless way
Would soon forget his shining.

We need the darkness and the veil, The sob of anguish and the wail, To bring out all our brightness As, when spring comes, a glorious orional And winter's mold is pushed aside. The clods but show the difference w. 'Twixt them and daisy's whiteness.

Against the will of the Most High,
But do our simple duty.
Put all our needless fears to rout, And pierce, by faith, the clouds of doubt.
