"THAT'S DIFFERENT!"

By RUTH CAMERON.

RUTH CAMERON

"It is perfectly absurd for Mary not to jump at the chance," I heard a neighbor of mine saying the other day. I asked what chance.

"Why, Mrs. Martin wants to adopt Mary's youngest child. Mary is a widow with two children and the youngest is a little dear and Mrs. Martin has quite fallen in love with her and wants to adopt her, and would you believe it, Mary can't make up her mind to let her. And all Mary has is that bit of a house and her washing. I can't understand it. I should think she would jump at the chance."

"What Would You Do?" "Would you want to give up Louise?"

"That's different," she answered sharply. "Different?"

"I'm not a widow with only a few dollars a week to keep my family together."

"Do you think you would be willing to give up Louise if you were?"

"It's her duty to do it," impatiently. "I should think you could see it."

I can see it, at least I can see what my neighbour means—that little Rose will have more comforts than her mother can give her and that there will be more left for the other child. Even so, I'm not absolutely sure she would be doing the best thing for the child to let her go. I'm not so omniscient as to know that.

But what I certainly cannot understand is the unfeeling attitude of my neighbour, just because the woman is of another financial class than she. And I have no patience with her superior "That's different."

As if They Were of Another Class. There are a great many people of the middle and upper class (I use the word in a financial sense), who think there is an actual difference between the people of the lower class and themselves. Such a woman doesn't expect these people to be actuated by the same feelings, the same loves and hates, the same desire for pleasure, the same resentment of monotony, the same physical weariness and mental unrest as she.

Her laundress is sick and does not come to wash. She is impatient and resentful at the inconvenience, suspects her of drinking and is usually careless enough to say so without real grounds. The next day she has a headache, probably not half so bad as the illness which kept the washerwoman home, and she goes to bed and has the doctor.

When the Maid's Mother is Ill. Her maid has to leave because her mother is very ill. "It does seem as if these people always took the worst times to be sick," she says. How would she feel if anybody spoke so unfeelingly about her mother's illness?

My own washerwoman told me the other day that one of the women for whom she works is very impatient because she will not do her washing on afternoons when she has already done a washing elsewhere. Margaret has to go out to work because her husband is ill. She is none too strong to do her own work. The doctor says she ought to have a complete rest, instead of doing her work and other people's. The woman knows this. And yet, "She always lies down two hours in the afternoon, but she thinks nothing is too much for me," says Margaret bitterly.

Doesn't it just make you hot when you find people with that point of view? It does me.

Substitutes for Alcohol.

Hot Milk With Cane Sugar as a "Pick-Me-Up."

(From a Medical Correspondent.) Much effort and ingenuity has been expended in attempting to discover a substitute for alcohol. Most of that trouble has been wasted, because alcohol is a commodity by itself, with properties peculiar to itself, producing a specific effect. Strictly speaking, there is no substitute for alcohol; the real question at issue is whether some of the more general effects of alcohol may not be procurable by other means.

Many persons drink alcohol for its tonic or poisonous effect. These will tell you that it is not whisky they like, but the feeling which whisky imparts. They may be assured at once that their case is hopeless. By means of no other preparation can the poisonous effects of alcohol be produced—that is, if the others and other similar substances be excluded.

But alcohol has very diverse uses. It is a stimulant of the rapidly diffusible order, and as such is helpful occasionally, especially in old age. This quality can be imitated. As is well known, sal volatile (aromatic spirits of ammonia) is a good substitute for whisky or brandy. Alcohol is also a restorative. Here a number of preparations may take its place. Very strong black coffee is justly esteemed the best of these; very strong tea deserves mention; cocoa also is useful. There is, moreover, mate, about which heated controversies have taken place from time to time. The objection to strong tea and coffee is that they contain caffeine, which, taken at night, produces great wakefulness, followed by a period of depression.

One of the best restorative drinks it is possible to procure is hot milk with a liberal allowance of cane sugar in it. The effect of the cane sugar is a general bracing up of the muscular system, which lasts long after the effect of alcohol would have passed away. This drink is, of course, free from all objections.

Just as the effects of alcohol can often be dissipated quickly by a few drops of the liquor of the acetate of ammonia (this is the basis of most so-called "pick-me-ups"), so undiluted lemon juice helps to relieve the thirst of the person accustomed to spirits. Strong lemon drinks may be used for a time instead of alcohol, but, though refreshing, they are apt to exert rather a "lowering" influence. Dry ginger ale is free from this objection, and is probably the best of the manufactured non-alcoholic beverages. An excellent hot-weather drink, too—and one frequently used by fieldworkers—is oatmeal water. Barley water has its place in the same category. But for sheer merit there is nothing which can compare with really good better-milk. Buttermilk is food and drink; it is one of the best quenchers of the thirst that can possibly be obtained.

When planning the summer wardrobe, why not keep in mind the summer vacation and where you are going to spend it? If you are going to the shore, add some flirty dresses for afternoon and evening wear.
