

A New Conservative Platform.

Some two weeks ago, at the annual dinner of the Merchant Tailors' Company, in London, Mr. Disraeli, gave to the world some new views of old political history, and announced a new platform for the British Conservatives. In referring to bygone days, when their leaders were attempting to rally the fragments of a beaten, broken and disheartened party, he gave as the reason for their non-success the plea that "for a considerable period the Tory party had not been in due relation with the people of England on three subjects which interest them—liberty, industry, and religion." This is a very mild way of stating that the party of which Mr. Disraeli is now the leader, in old times opposed all progress, and worked with the single purpose of keeping things as they were. They took no note of the changes going on every day—of the rapid development of liberal ideas, and the demands made by the people for much-needed reforms in the expansion of liberty, in the encouragement of industry, and in divesting religion of the state trammels in which it was often bound. While speaking thus of his own party, he is of opinion that the relation of the Whigs to the country was quite what it should have been. The Whigs tried to remedy the grievances of England by the aid of doctrines chiefly of Continental growth, and which have subsequently been known by the name of Liberal opinions. No one, admits Mr. Disraeli, can deny that those opinions contain much that is just and true and beneficial, and that they have done great good to the community; yet they were essentially abstract doctrines, and when pushed, as of late, to their logical conclusion, they alarmed and offended the English people; who believe in traditions and not in doctrines, in their fathers rather than in themselves, in old times rather than in these times.

Mr. Disraeli thinks that the Tory party are now in "due relation" with the people, and consequently that they are tranquil, prosperous and contented. He seems to forget that there are agricultural lock-outs, that the Eastern counties are disquieted and the farmers not thriving, that thousands of discharged laborers are making sad inroads on the Poor Law funds, and that hundreds have already left, or are preparing to leave, in search of a livelihood in Canada. We do not say that these drawbacks to prosperity exist because the Conservatives are in power, but Mr. Disraeli should not claim too much for his party; and until all these troubles are at an end, he cannot truthfully say that it is in "due relation" with the people. When he is able to accomplish—as he proposes—the physical, intellectual, and spiritual elevation of the thirty millions in Britain, then we will say that this relation is a reality, but until then we must come to the conclusion that Mr. Disraeli has been indulging in visions, and chalking out a policy which reads well on paper, which may tickle the fancy of his followers, but which we fear in the actual outcome will come far short of the positive and admitted reforms brought about by Mr. Gladstone, and the late Liberal Government.

Don't Like It.—The Mail and Speculator make very nice whiff they refer to Mr. Chisholm's presence at the Halton Reform picnic. The Spec feels happy that he did not call himself a Reformer, and that he stood among the few noble Independents who are well known to be continually on the look out for the winning side, and who are always open to conviction at the right time. The Mail talks about Mr. Chisholm more in sorrow than anger, and thinks, as he "wended his way back to Hamilton on Wednesday night, he could have wished he had declined the pressing invitation of the Grit Committee." It is to be hoped that Mr. Chisholm is satisfied with himself, for no one else seems to be. The Reformers have grave doubts about the sincerity of his convictions, and in the words of Rymal, wo.'t take him into their confidence till he makes a full confession of faith. The Tories don't know what to make of him—whether to read him out of the ranks as a renegade and a traitor, or bear with his vagaries a little longer in the hope that he may yet go back to the Conservative fold. On the whole it is a nice position for a politician to occupy.

The new Manitoba Cabinet has been completed. It is an Anglo-French coalition. The members are the Hon. M. A. Gerard, Provincial Secretary and Premier; Mr. R. A. Davis, Provincial Treasurer; Mr. E. H. G. Hay, Minister of Public Works and Agriculture; the Hon. J. Dubuc, Attorney-General; the Hon. F. Ogilvie, President of the Council; Mayor Carnish, of Winnipeg, has convoked an indignation meeting to protest against the composition of the new Ministry.

A convention of seventy-seven Reform delegates, representing each municipal ward in East Elgin, was held at Aylmer on Thursday, and made choice of Mr. Colin McDougall, barrister, St. Thomas, as the Liberal candidate for the Commons at the forthcoming election. Mr. McDougall is a man of decided talent, a very effective political speaker, and very popular in the constituency. A more unanimous and enthusiastic convention never before met in the riding, and the prospects of a successful issue were never better.

The general forms of the ballot-boxes have been submitted to the Department of Public Works, for use at Parliamentary elections.

The Guelph Economical Range.

Mr. Thurstans Groom, a workman employed in Raymond's Sewing Machine Factory in this town, is the inventor of a cooking range that promises to cause a revolution in the management of domestic affairs. The article comprises all the qualities necessary for the culinary purposes of a well-ordered house, while it possesses also arrangements by which water or steam can be conducted to any part of a building. The Economical Range is made in different sizes, the smallest being about four feet long and six feet high. It can be set in a wall entirely, or project about ten inches, and thus occupy very little space. The coal fire is made in the centre of the range, in an apartment measuring about ten inches deep by about six inches across, the smoke escaping by the chimney in the rear. On either side of the fire are the ovens, heated by means of a hollow chamber on all sides through which the hot air passes from the fire. These ovens are also ventilated so that all odors arising from the cooking can be avoided. At the back of the fire a place is arranged for a hot air chamber or water boiler, according to the taste of the purchaser, and by means of a damper in front the heat can be communicated to this, and the water or heat thus obtained carried by pipes to other rooms for bathing or warming purposes. In the fire-place there is a false bottom for use when a small fire only is required; and the heat sent to both ovens, or either of them can be regulated at will by means of dampers. The top parts of the range can be removed and the fire-place thrown open similar to that in an ordinary coal grate. Above the range is a rack on which dishes can be placed and kept warm. The whole apparatus is unique, and we hope to see it come into general use.

Mr. Groom is a practical mechanic, having worked at the business in the Old Country for about sixteen years. He came to this place in September last, and in his odd moments has occupied himself by inventing and manufacturing this Range. He is assisted by his brother, Joseph Groom, who is resident here also. The proprietors claim that by this invention the disagreeable smell caused by the ordinary cooking are avoided, while the cost of fuel for keeping one of these ranges going all day is no more than by an ordinary stove. The cost of the Range will be from about $85 upwards; and although the price looks high, yet when we consider all the facts, it is doubtful whether this plan of cooking and heating is not more economical in the end than the ordinary one. The Range will be on exhibition at Howard's tin shop, corner Norfolk and Quebec streets, next week. The proprietors have applied for a patent for their invention.

Canada has reason to be proud of so successful a commencement to the great rifle tourney.—Mail.

Several hundred Mormon immigrants arrived in New York the other day. Some of the principal Farmers' Granges in Illinois have already collapsed. The northern papers are advocating return tickets to and from Toronto on the northern railway. The melon-colic days are coming, the earliest in the year. Mind your P's and Q's—that is to say your peas and your cumpers. Mr. Thomas Gibson, of Elma, has flax four feet six inches long.
