MIGRATION OF NEGROES ALARMS THE WHITES

is any statesman of the two races of the South.

We hope the Christian people of America, both North and South, will hear the voice of God speak and say Feed my sheep. I do not know what part of the country you are from but we hope that in the conscience of the statesman will hear that still small voice of God. To aid and amend in some new way to help settle some of the problems of the South, for God blessed both white people and black alike.

The second speaker on the program was Dr. George E. Haynes, who said: I can corroborate the statement of Dr. Fisher. He pointed out that the migration of the Negro was due to economic, social, and personal causes. The economics were largely an outgrowth of war conditions, when the North, being to a certain extent, stripped of its workers, left an opening for employment which the Negro of the South was quick to grasp. They did their grasping because the lack of opportunity in the South, because of the "Jim Crow" cars, the lynching, and general lack of educational, and other facilities, and Dr. Haynes recalled that in some cases the migration was so complete that whole districts moved North and took their pastor with them.

As to the effect upon the North Dr. Haynes believed it could work out to the advantage of the Negro without being a drawback to the whites. In one respect, between labor and capital, he believed the Negro would contribute an important incentive for peace. For the past has demonstrated that the Negro worker has the capacity of seeing a little of both sides of the case. And in that event the inevitable result is greater co-operation and harmony.

As to the whites there is now a feeling of resentment, because of the migrations, and that has already reflected in race riots and other incidents. In some cases communities have tried to work out some social adjustment, whereby the Negroes in their midst might have justice done to them, without encouraging the arrival of others. In other instances the old, established Negroes have experienced new, and growing coldness on the part of the whites, who formerly treated them kindly; and in still other cases there are agitators in favor of separate schools, so his appeal was for greater co-operation and greater tolerance toward the Negro. Miss Grace Abbott, white president of the Association, gave her assurance that the social workers would provide whatever co-operation lies within their power.
