THE BRITISH PARTIES. week, and an exciting session is expected. Once more is emphasized the statement of Mr. Gladstone and the Liberal party that the Imperial Parliament is overburdened, and that a certain amount of decentralization is necessary in order that the business of the country may be properly conducted, without overburdening the representatives of the people. If the local affairs of England, Ireland and Scotland were conducted by legislatures as are the local affairs of be possible for the Imperial Parliament to transact the business of the different portions of the Empire falling under its jurisdiction in a session lasting from three to four months. At present, Parliament sits almost continuously, the average session lasting eight or nine months every year. The result is that only very rich men can accept seats in the House, and the representative character of the assembly that should prevail in a democratic country is not maintained. Appropriately en in the autumn session now about to be held, members will be called upon to consider measures looking to the conclusion of legisla tion begun last year, and having special reference to Ireland, the local government of which, proceeding on wrong principles, has given the Imperial Parliament so much trouble. In 1886 the Gladstone Government was defeated through defection in the English con-stituencies arising from the home rule legislation brought forward by Gladstone.

objection of the English people was not against the concession of the right to the Irish people to a full measure of local self-government. It was founded on the Land Bill which, unadvisedly, was tacked on to the home rule scheme. The English taxpayers rightly objected to the credit being pledged to the Irish land-lords, many of whom had rackrented their tenants to such an extent as to have long since obtained more than a fair price for their land. They voted the bill down, and Gladstone was defeated. But the Conservative leaders, after having aided in defeating Gladstone by raising objections of this sort to his land measure, now come forward with a bill on the same lines. They wish to have the Irish landlords bought out, and the State is made finally responsible for the price at which the land is sold to the tenants. It remains to be seen whether the scheme will secure public indersation.

There is a rumor abroad that the Parnell that they may profit by rushing on the general elections at an early date. The report is not likely to be verified. British an individual who has fallen by the way.

The Liberals have not only promised to settle the Irish question, on the only basis that is likely to be lasting and beneficial to the whole people, but they have other re-forms ready for advocacy before the electorate which are not calculated to lose them friends. This was shown in a marked degree at the conference of the National Liberal Federation the other day, when there were embraced in the Liberal platform free education, re-form in the land laws, the disestablishment and disendowment of the Church of Scotland, local option, the formation of district and parish councils, and the mending or ending of the House of Lords. The majority of these questions are ripe for settlement, and if the Irish question were once out of the way, and a Liberal Govern-

They have been in business since 1862, and decline to be classed as afraid to hold their own in the unrestricted market of North America. Nay, they believe with Mr. Waterous that freedom to buy and sell in the United States would enarge the market for their products. In reply to a reporter, Mr. Farran said:

THE INDIAN DELUSION

That religious superstitions have always existed among the Indians is well known, but that any delusion should have roused that phlegmatic race to great and widespread excitement is surprising. The idea by which there should be unrestricted is that a so-called Messiah of the red men reciprocity of trade between the two is now somewhere in the mountains of countries." If every Canadian who is in Nevada preparing to sweep the white race favor of unrestricted reciprocity with the from the earth and leave the red race in possession. The delusion originated about a year ago, and has since been steadily spreading until now it rules the imagination races hundreds of miles apart. At least a dozen Indian tribes, notably the Araphoes of Wyoming, the Northern Cheyennes of Tongue River, and the Sioux of Pine Ridge, are laboring under the excitement produced by this strange belief.

The race feeling of the red men is strong ly appealed to in the picture drawn by the preachers of this new delusion. aborigines only will be left in the land, and all dead Indians will be restored to life. The buffalo will appear again, the plain will be stocked with horses, and game and fish are to be had for the taking. With such brilliant prospects in store labor seems useless to them, crops are neglected, and time is taken up with talk about the future. Ghost dances form the only occupation that is pursued with assiduity. Those who have seen the Indian Messiah say that he expressly commands not only industry and sobriety but living at peace with the whites. But the original teachings of this mysterious prophet, whoever he may be, are difficult to determine. They are confused not only with scraps of the Christian faith, but with the practical grievances that each tribe has, such as complaints against agents and lack of food.

The fear of the settlers in the borders of the reservation is lest the excitement celectors are not very ready to condone immoralities on the part of individuals; but they have never shown any disposition to aubordinate the advancement of great principles to the meting out of punishment to an individual who has fallen by the way.

The doctor had had the mills inspected, and a large quantity of the larvæ of the flour moth (Ephestia Kuhniella) had been discovered. Steps had been taken to remedy the evil. A round was made of the flour stores of the city, and the flour moth was discovered in several of them. —In making his annual report, the United States consul at Winnipeg points out the strong feeling that exists in the Northwest in favor of reciprocal trade with the States. "Its most emphatic expression," he adds, was the passage by a unanimous vote of the Legislature of Manitoba of a resolution on the 18th of March, 1890, urging 'that steps may be taken by the Dominion Parliament to negotiate with the Government of the United States of America, with a view of arriving at some agreemen States is a traitor to Canada, as the re strictionists say, what a terrible bad crowd they must be in Manitoba!

-The London Times, in direct contradiction of statements made by Canadian newspapers which sneer at Britain's standing under a free trade policy, asserts that there is a steady but slow improvement going on in the position of agriculture in England. A loose expression in a London weekly paper ntly gave currency to the opinion that "an enor have become vacant this Michaelmas," and this led the Midland Counties Herald to send out a number of inquiries on the subject, the replies to which are decidedly reassuring. Out of 43 replies 31 are dis-tinctly favorable and encouraging; 6 are satisfactory but not over-sanguine, and only 6 take a decidedly unfavorable view of the agricultural situation, and these latter refer to farms the staple of which is a heavy clay, or with an intractable subsoil undrained or badly drained, or else out of condition. In the best of times such farms as these are hard to let.

Ontario, like Quebec, is moving in the direction of providing its school children with free text books. The chances are that Ontario will have the benefit of the change first. The proposition there is that the Legislature shall allow the municipalities to take the burden upon themselves; here it is that the Provincial treasury shall bear the expense. The difference is fundamental and shows how in one thing, at any rate, the sister Province is ahead of Quebec. The people of Ontario know who provides the money that is spent in public services.
