MYSTERIOUS TRAGEDY IN HAMILTON BAY

Hamilton, May 31. - Albert Milburn and Harry McEwen fell out of a gasoline launch here Saturday, and were drowned. The tragedy occurred in the bay, far out from the shore.

The two men, in company with David McEwen, of British Columbia, had been out sailing the greater part of the day in a gasoline launch. They went up and down the bay several times, About 4:15 they were on their second trip to the beach, and David McEwen was steering the craft. The others were in the stern of the boat, pumping out some water and tinkering about the engine.

McEwen, who was steering, did not pay any attention, he says, to his companions in the stern, and when he felt the boat tilt he did not look around. The boat was light and speedy, and after it had gone some distance he casually looked around to see what his nephew and his chum were doing.

To his surprise neither of them were in the boat, but on standing up he was able to see the head of one of them as he went down for the last time. He did not know how to stop the engine, and before he finally succeeded the bodies were out of sight. After a considerable delay he managed to attract the attention of some yachtsmen, and they towed the launch back to the scene of the accident. There was no trace of the bodies, and a search of several hours failed to recover them.

Both men were unmarried. McEwen was 29 years of age, and lived with his brother and his married sister. His parents live in Springside, Sask. Milburn was 25 years of age. His parents are both dead, and he, too, lived with his brother. Both were employed at the International Harvester Works.

There is considerable conjecture as to how the men came to fall into the water. It is believed that they may have been tussling with each other, and have fallen overboard, or that one of them lost his balance, and that the other went in after him. McEwen was a good swimmer, but Milburn could not swim
