Scatterd appeared for Seabrooke.

The trouble over the cigar store of Chas. Williams, of Windsor, has been quieted but not brought to rest. This city, tried to foreclose a mortgage on the stock for $1,257, but were unable to do so. A bailiff, however, seized the stock, but Judge McHugh granted an injunction and appointed a receiver. A proposition was made to the mortgagees on Friday that they accept the amount of the mortgage in full and renounce their claims to the stock. This was done, and the business will now be carried on by Williams, who only purchased the stock a few days ago from Charles Stewart.

A very pleasant time was spent on Thursday evening at the residence of Mrs. Scarcliffe, Clarence street, when an "at home" was given by her son, William R., to about forty of his friends. The large dining-room was tastefully decorated. Progressive bridge was played until one o'clock. The head prize was won by Miss K. Mason, and the booby prize by Miss E. Winnett, while Mr. G. Lacey won the prize given for most games won at the intermediate tables. Supper being served, dancing was then enjoyed until four in the morning, when the happy gathering broke up by voting Mr. Scarcliffe a very genial host and singing "God Save the Queen."—Com.

VERY SUSPICIOUS CASE

Made Against Marth Ridley, an Alleged Thief.

She was Charged with Stealing $13, but Blamed it on the Man With Whom She Roomed—A Weak Link in the Evidence—Tim Sullivan To Go To the Central.

Martha Ridley, a well-dressed, respectable-looking young woman, narrowly escaped conviction at the Police Court yesterday on a charge of stealing $13 from Mrs. North, who lives in the O'Callaghan terrace on Ridout street.

The evidence in the case against the prisoner was minus just one link, but the Magistrate refused to grant a remand for a few days to give the Crown Counsel an opportunity to complete the chain.

His Worship candidly admitted the case was very suspicious. In July last two persons representing themselves as Mr. and Mrs. Will Stanley called at Mrs. North's and secured rooms. They did not want board, but decided to have their meals in their apartments, an arrangement which was satisfactory to Mrs. North. The couple were of rather the sociable disposition, and became very free about the place. One day early in September, Mrs. North went out in the afternoon, and when she returned at 9.30 o'clock at night she found that Mr. and Mrs. Stanley had taken their baggage and decamped. Thirteen dollars was missing from a drawer.

Mrs. North's room, and the conclusion instantly arrived at was that the birds who had flown knew something about it. They couldn't be found, however, at the time and nothing more was heard of them for a few days ago, when Mrs. Stanley was arrested for theft in Brantford, where she gave the name of Martha Ridley.

Martha pleaded that she was innocent, and said Stanley took the money.

Chief of Police Williams was one of the two witnesses called by the Crown, and his evidence was concerning a conversation he had with the prisoner after she was brought back to London. He said that Stanley was taking the money and that she was to prevent Stanley stealing from Mrs. North on a previous occasion. With the contents of Mrs. North's pocketbook Martha said Stanley bought two watches under the direction of Stanley, and that after living there a short time she went to Brantford and he to Hamilton. Stanley continued his tricks in the Ambitious City and had to leave.

The Magistrate was of the opinion that the latter part of the evidence had no bearing on the case, and he told the Chief.

"But," said Mr. Williams, "it is only a part of her statement to me."

"Yes," continued the P. M., "but she may have also talked about the weather, and yet I could not consider it as evidence."

Mr. McKillop asked the Magistrate to remand the prisoner for a few days to allow him to bring Mrs. North's daughter as a witness.

His Worship refused, and Mr. McKillop pocketed, so that he was willing to speak, at or go on errands of mercy, and give of his wealth for the needs of the Gospel. These converted souls put their wealth into one common stock and used it of as were their needs.

"Remember that, dear friends. Just in proportion as heaven comes near to a person, just in the same proportion do the things of this world become as trifles."

"These conversions are needed in our day. There are thousands and millions of people in this world who have never heard of a Redeemer."

"There are men within and without the pale of Christendom that need converting."

"If some men ever get to heaven, it will be because of a succession of conversions. When they were converted all the twists and turns of their lives were taken out of them."

"Sudden conversions are possible today—conversions as sudden, conversions as thorough as in the past."

"Gradual conversions are more human than divine."

"In the very nature of things conversion is a short step—from darkness to light, from Satan to God."

"The principal reason why I believe in sudden conversion is that the grace of God can effect it."

"I would rather send a man home angry than indifferent."

"These were some of the good things given utterance to by Rev. Mr. Jackson."

KNOX CHURCH ANNIVERSARY. The congregations at the Presbyterian Church in the Sixth Ward yesterday, on the occasion of the anniversary celebration, were large and comprised quite a number of other city churches. Rev. Dr. Hunter, of Eskine Church, Toronto, was the preacher, and he delivered two very powerful sermons. In the morning he chose as his text a portion of the seventeenth verse of the Seventy-third Psalm:—"Until I went into the Sanctuary." He asked, at the outset, the attention of his hearers to the thought of the influence of the sanctuary, which was God's church, not one founded by God's will or covered by a roof, but the meeting place of God. The Psalmist was in trouble when he penned this Psalm. He saw around him wicked men prospering and godly men thrown prostrate to the dust. He meditated day and night upon this peculiar condition, and could not understand it until he had communion with God. Then he understood all about it. In the sanctuary he is brought into touch with the other world. This is only the porch, the vestibule; we are simply passing through the world just now and before us are the palaces of the King. We can afford to put up with a share of troubles here. It will be only for a little while, and God, reigning above, will discriminate between right and wrong, and place us all where we belong. The influence of the thought of eternity upon our lives is the principal theme offered to us by the text, and the preacher arranged it under three heads, viz.:—1. Its separating or sanctifying power; 2. Its stimulating power; and 3. Its satisfying power. The influence of the present life upon us is, naturally, earthly, worldly, and acts like a narcotic to ambition, whereby we think it useless to conform ourselves to God's great plan. But Jesus Christ, if they would but turn to Him, would sanctify and satisfy all desires and ambitions, and fill the high ideal mapped out by the believer. Instances

KNOX CHURCH ANNIVERSARY

Rev. George Jackson Speaks About Conversions.

The Matilda Street Baptists Have Opening Service—They Formerly Worshipped on Grosvenor Street. Rev. Father Devlin Lectures in St. Peter's Cathedral in Behalf of the Children of Mary—Notes.

HOME AGAIN.

Askin Street Methodists worshipped in their beautiful edifice again yesterday, after an exile of two months or more, during the making of a number of improvements. The changes made to the interior gave general satisfaction, and the congregation took readily to the somewhat altered condition of things.

Special sermons were preached, in the morning by Rev. Geo. Jackson, of London, President of the Conference, and in the evening by Rev. James Livingstone, of Aylmer. Both discourses were very able. The music was also of a special nature, the choir being under the direction of Mr. Frank Callander. Large congregations were present at both services.

President Jackson preached from a text found in Acts ii, 41: "And the same day there were added unto them about three thousand souls." He told, he said, of the origin of Christianity. It showed us that it began in the shape of a glorious revival. And it would be a grand thing to have the counterpart of it to-day. Such a thing was possible. Everything was ready on the part of God. There was no restraint of grace or love. These were three thousand sudden conversions. The people changed their faith; they gave up the sublime forms of Judaism. They gave up their companionship. Friendship gave way to persecution and affliction. On every hand they got the cold shoulder. The change they underwent was not a mere freak or notion; it was an inward change. True religion would reach a man's soul, change his heart, touch his head, his hand, his feet and his pocket, so that he was willing to speak, at or go on errands of mercy, and give of his wealth for the needs of the Gospel. These converted souls put their wealth into one common stock and used it of as were their needs.

"Remember that, dear friends. Just in proportion as heaven comes near to a person, just in the same proportion do the things of this world become as trifles."

"These conversions are needed in our day. There are thousands and millions of people in this world who have never heard of a Redeemer."

"There are men within and without the pale of Christendom that need converting."

"If some men ever get to heaven, it will be because of a succession of conversions. When they were converted all the twists and turns of their lives were taken out of them."

"Sudden conversions are possible today—conversions as sudden, conversions as thorough as in the past."
