Destruction Wrought by Insects in the United States caused by insects is estimated at $150,000,000. Here is a fair battle between man and another sort of earth occupiers. They are smaller, but if they can whip us, have undoubtedly as good a right to the world as we have. As civilization advances, new insects make their appearance, marching sometimes castward, but generally westward. There are few, if any, forms of vegetation that have no parasites that devour either follage or fruit. The loss to the cotton crop is estimated at $15,000,000 a year, while that to the apple crop is not much less, and that to the potato crop at least one half as much. But the estimate is not a fair one until into the loss is counted the time spent in fighting to secure the proportion

—The customs authorities have made a seigure of a wire rigging imported for use in the construction of the big timber ship at Joggins, and have resolved to levy export duty on all the timber contained in the ship. Their grounds are that the thing being constructed is a raft, nota ship. H. R. Robertson, the builder of the ship, has armed bimself with a score of affidavits from people who swear that the structure he is building is a ship, and is on his way to Ottawa to try and induce the authorities to treat it as such.
