FOR SCHOOL DAYS

Navy blue suit, having a white stripe, was chosen for this dress. The material, although rough, is not heavy, and the arrangement of bias bands forms the principal trimming. These are hemmed with the hem on the outside, which gives the effect of a facing.

The clear glass buttons are sewed on with brilliant cerise silk, and silk velvet ribbon is used for bow and girdle. A dainty linen collar is fastened in the back and shows about an inch above the dress itself.

TO MAKE DEBUT IN GRAND OPERA

Madame Yvonne de Treville's Appearance at Arena Matinee Today Is Her First as Grand Opera Star.

A genuine surprise awaits the musical public of Toronto and the visitors from other cities who have come to the city in shoals for festival week, when Madame Yvonne de Treville makes her first appearance in Canada at the matinee performance today.

Her appearance at the Toronto musical festival is her debut in America as a grand opera artist. She is ranked by European critics with the five greatest living coloratura singers, the others being Marcella Sembrich, Emma Tetrazzini, Selma Kurz, and Frieda Kempel. She is admitted to have highest range of them all. She sings the Mozart "Magic Flute" aria in the original key, and in the cadenza of the "Bell Song" from "Lakme," reaches the high F's (F in alt.) with perfect ease. This is an unparalleled achievement in the present generation.

An attractive feature of Madame Treville's appearances is that she is an accomplished harpist, and in encore numbers usually accompanies herself on that instrument.

When a Young Lady is Old

When a very pretty young woman like Miss Louise Kelley, who plays La Comtesse de Montanvert, in "The Pink Lady," portrays the character of a disdained noblewoman, supposed to be rapidly approaching middle age, it is proof that there are on the stage youthful actresses who "make up" old as well as—well, are they really old?

One is just as likely as not to think Miss Kelley is 25, because she must so appear, when, as a matter of fact, she is barely in the twenties. Haven't you often seen a tall girl whom you thought much older until you learned her true age? Well, that's Miss Kelley's case exactly. It worked to her advantage once—this looking old for her years—and that was when she ran away to go on the stage. It seems incredible when you are permitted to enjoy a chat with her that not long ago she defied parents and conventionalities to become a professional actress, and that is true. This is the way she tells the story:

"I was a kid in school," said Miss Kelley, "when I determined to go on the stage. 'The Sultan of Sulu' was playing in Chicago, my home city, and I got my courage up and applied for work in it. I looked at least five years older than I was, and so no questions were asked, and I got a part as one of the wives of the sultan. My singing and acting seemed to please, and before I knew it I was making good. Of course, my family was wondering what had happened to me, and when they discovered I was on the stage it was all off with me and back to short dresses and long lessons.

"Do I advise running away for those ambitious children who want to be actresses. Indeed I do not; I believe it should be talked over among the members of the family, and that the girl's future should be seriously considered. If she has any talent let her have a chance to develop it. For a girl who has to make her own living I do not know of a better profession than the stage. She should go about it, however, somewhat the same way as I did when I was put back in school. I studied there and kept at my music and dramatics until I convinced my people that I was sincere and earnest and would probably do better in a theatrical career than any other. I was afterwards allowed to take it up again, with full sanction of my parents and the best wishes of my friends. One of the next things I did was a good part in 'The Proud Prince' with E. H. Sothern, and in it I had a song. I afterwards played in a number of the Sothern and Sothern Shakespearean productions, and also with Virginia Harbord. Just think of it—I played the part of an old woman—90 years of age—when I was with Miss Harbord. Pretty good for a school girl. I've sung leading roles in the best known grand operas. It sounds as though I had been years at it, but I haven't. It has just happened that I've played here and there for parts of a season, or during the summer.

"I have never been happier than as the countess in 'The Pink Lady.' I never seem to get tired of it. I have had some very flattering offers which I have refused for the sake of the charm I find in this play. It suits my temperament admirably, and I find genuine delight working in it."

Miss Wylie declared that a responsible member of the cabinet had challenged the women to do something similar to what the men did in burning down a castle when they were seeking the ballot. The women had then sent a message to the cabinet where ministers were to speak later. This fact had been misrepresented everywhere. She then appealed to Canadian women to do the aid of their British sisters as Canadian men had come to the aid of the mother country at the time of the Boer War, which arose out of the struggle for votes for the British in the Transvaal.

Federal Legislation. Miss Wylie urged the women to seek federal legislation rather than try to win in the provinces. It was objected that the appeal to the privy council for the marriage laws showed this course to be dubious. Miss Wylie insisted on its being the only way. She declared that British statesmen had again and again told suffragists there that they must "poster, poster, poster" in order to get the vote.

It was decided to have Miss Wylie address an open meeting of the society on Thursday evening, Oct. 17, in the Guild Hall.

Miss Wylie's program at present includes: The Heliconian Club this afternoon (Wednesday); on Friday evening, the Literary and Debating Society of Trinity College; on Saturday evening the Progressive Club in the Forum Hall.

MISS WYLIE SAYS GET FEDERAL MEASURE

Advised Toronto Suffragists to Concentrate Their Efforts to Securing Dominion Legislation — Condemned Treatment of Women in Jail — To Speak at Public Meeting.

Yesterday afternoon a private reception was tendered to Miss Barbara Wylie, the notable English suffragette, by the executive committee of the Toronto Suffrage Society. A great deal has been said regarding the relations of Miss Wylie with the Canadian suffragists, and considerable interest was attached to this meeting as a consequence.

Asked point-blank by Dr. Gordon and others why it had been thought in England that it was necessary to "organize" the suffragists out here, Miss Wylie explained her attitude on this point. It was evident that she did not know of the affiliation of the various societies under the Dominion Society. Her intention, she stated, in a most polished and impassioned appeal for more radical methods here, was to point out to Canadian women how their action for or against English methods was reacting in that country. It was stated that suffrage would be obtained here without militancy. If so, then Canada might be regarded as a civilized country, whereas England certainly was not.

Forcible Feeding. Miss Wylie then described the torture of the women for forcible feeding in prison as a mere ruse of the government, calculated to ruin the women's health and render them useless in the future. She said that it was well known that no nourishment was derived by the process.

Miss Wylie denied that the women starved themselves to get out of prison; she said that they did so in order that they might be placed in the first-class of prisoners, or because the government would consent to place only the leaders in that class, while the rank and file were placed in third or second class. The fight to be classed as political prisoners was then reviewed by her.

Miss Wylie declared that a responsible member of the cabinet had challenged the women to do something similar to what the men did in burning down a castle when they were seeking the ballot. The women had then sent a message to the cabinet where ministers were to speak later. This fact had been misrepresented everywhere. MME. BLAUVELT SINGS TONIGHT

Miss Felice Lyne Too III to Appear and Another Noted Prima Donna Was Secured.

Messrs. Solman and Dalton, who are the sponsors of the Toronto Musical Festival, last evening made the announcement that it has been necessary to substitute for Miss Felice Lyne, who was to have made her first appearance here tonight, the noted prima donna, Madame Lillian Blauvelt. This news will, no doubt, be welcome to many music lovers, for she has long been one of the most popular singers in the world.

To illustrate the celebrity with which these gentlemen work, it may be said that the news that Miss Lyne was so ill that she would possibly be unable to

The Nursery

It is absolutely necessary to give up one room to the sick child. This should be the quietest, sunniest room in the house. The bed should be placed so that the sun does not shine directly into the patient's eyes; and also out of the range of a draft when the windows and door are open. If this is not possible a screen can be used to shield the patient.

Quietness and order are most essential in the sick room. Even if there is no fear of contagion do not allow other children to play in the room in an effort to amuse the sick one. The excitement will only make the child nervous and increase the fever. More than two people should never be allowed in the room at one time; and this number is too many unless some work is to be done.

If a trained nurse is in attendance, do not interfere with her work, thinking that you, as the mother, know what the child needs. This nurse can be trusted to do her duty. If you have over any child left to herself and allowed to use her own tactics where there is no nurse, one person should be responsible for everything that concerns the sick room. The nurse can be trusted to do her duty. If you have over any child left to herself and allowed to use her own tactics where there is no nurse, one person should be responsible for everything that concerns the sick room.

It is hard, indeed, for a mother to attend to her household duties, look after the children who are well, and nurse the sick, too. If you attempt to do all these things, I am quite sure there will be another patient in the house before long. And when mother fails sick, then something does happen.

So be wise in time, little mother. Something has to be left undone; so cheerfully leave it alone, and keep yourself strong, cheerful and happy enough to pull the little one thru.

Oliver Friedman, who will sing in the Toronto Musical Festival this evening.

get to Toronto only reached them by wire on Sunday night. For hours the wires were kept hot sending telegrams to replace her, and it was learned that Madame Blauvelt was expected to arrive from Europe on a steamer due on Monday afternoon. A wireless message was sent to her on board, requesting that she arrange to leave for Toronto as soon as she arrived in New York.

She accepted the handsome terms offered and will be on hand for rehearsal this morning. There will be no change in the number of the program, since, as many Torontonians are aware, every number in Miss Lyne's repertoire is well within the range of Madame Blauvelt. As a mere child she sang in the last Toronto Musical Festival, held on the occasion of the opening of Massey Hall in 1884, and has since won noted successes in many parts of the world, particularly in Russia, France and Belgium.
