The mayor referred to the Province of Quebec as "the spoiled child of confederation," and questioned why the people of this province should fight for that one, which had practically done nothing save contribute "a bare two or three thousand men."

He cited Australia's and Canada's part in the war of 1812 as instances of satisfactory modified forms of conscription. In saying that Toronto will always look back to her record of this war with pride, the mayor added that Toronto can still do more. He praised women for the efforts they are making, the mothers for their sacrifices, and the returned soldiers, who are to assist in recruiting campaigns.

Mayor Church's speech was the first of several given yesterday afternoon and evening. The meeting was held primarily in the interests of the 208th (Irish Fusiliers') Battalion, some of the officers of whom spoke. These included Lleut.-Col. Herbert Lennox, commander of the unit: Major Bennett, who had been at the front and wounded; Captain Joseph E. Thompson and Captain Hunter, chaplain of the battalion.

"I can not speak, but I can help your splendid young Canadians when they come to our buriet, "he said, and at the close she remarked that this was the first occasion on which she had addressed an audience. "Our work at first meant serving 10,000 men a month, Now we are serving 00,000 men a month. Now we are serving over there and morth. We never charge any-thing, for we cannot do enough," she said. With a touch of sympathy in her voice she declared: "We are mothers to your boys over there and we do our best to assist them, comfort them and keep the said that previously he had had no use for a society, but had been won over by kindens in England will avenge that if takes her last man," she said.

Countess Speaks.

The last speaker was the Countess of Limerick. She briefly reiterated in substance the address given by her at Massey Hall and Locw's Theatre, where recruiting rallies were held.

Col. Lennox predicted conscription in Canada, promised a "square deal" to those who join his command, and caused frequent laughter with his caustic references to "slackers." He said that Toronto could contribute more than she had done, the her record was beyond represent.

Capt. Thompson explained that collections taken by the association at the meetings would be combined in a fund to buy a Christmas tree and toys for the children of soldieps fighting overseas. He said the use of the theatre was donated, and that miscellaneous expenses were paid by members of the organization from their individual funds. He endorsed the iden to decorate with a silver cross each mother who has given her son to the cause.

Several songs were sung during the meeting and educational motion pictures were shown.

Mr. Justice Riddell made a strong appeal to the young manhood of Canada and security was not now so solidly showing active participation in this war he meminations elike.

Mr. Justice Riddell made a strong appeal to the young manhood of Canada and called upon each man to settle the question in the quibet of his own room. The prime minister of "all Canada" had asked for 100,000 men. The answer remained with the people. He maintained that the men in France and Flanders were defending Canada just as much as though the theatres where the Huns were on the coast. He made his first direct appeal last night and the navy came in for no small part of that.

ments to the Dobrudja front, and they have devoted their energies mainly to the defence of the more important northwestern and SARNIA MAN DIES northern fronts. It will probably take some days yet for their counter-measures against Von Mackensen to develop.

Concerning the operations on the Roumanian front, the military correspondent of The Outlook, a London journal, says that Roumania was brought into the war at a time suitable to the allies, and that her part was to raid Transylvania in order to divert German forces from the Carpathians, so as to permit the Russians to begin an advance on Budapest. If this is so, the advance has not begun, and it is not improbable that it will materialize in a march on some other objective in the north.

In France the British army spent the past two days in pushing forward its lines north of Les Boeufs, upon the low heights which the maps show, southwest of Le Transloy, while the French, at the same time, extended their front in the region of Sailly-Saillisel, upon the same Village of Le Transloy, The evident object of the allies is to surround this place, for it occupies a strong position on the Bethune road. Their plan is to throw their forces well across this avenue in order to improve their positions to enable a circling movement to proceed around Banaume from the southeest. The Pritish certification across this avenue in order to improve their positions to enable a circing movement to proceed around Bapaume from the southeast. The British artillery, Sir Douglas Haig reports, bombarded the positions of the enemy effectively, and when the Germans had more than they could stand, and dashed for the open, they were caught under infantry fire. Despite unsatisfactory weather, the British aeroplanes gave efficient service by bombarding the communications of the enemy.

Fuller information from Verdun shows that in their grand attack last week the French destroyed 31 German battalions and they took 5100 prisoners at a loss to themselves of only about 1700 men killed and wounded. The loss of Fort Douaumont deprives the Germans of a valuable observation post, and the German artillery fires blindly and so, ineffectively, in this region. Owing to much deep and sticky mud the soldiers are unable to dig new trenches and they have to maintain themselves mostly in shell holes. The fighting for the past two days has been confined to bombardments fighting for the past two days has been confined to bombardments.

Middlesex County, near Mount Brydges, 44 years ago, and had lived all his life at Strathroy and Sarnia. On the Russian front the lines of the enemy in Volhynia were investigated by several strong reconnaissance parties, according to Petrograd. The Germans aver that after an intense bombardment all along the line, the Russians attacked a wood on the stokhod River and were repulsed. Indications as gleanable from the official reports look to the revival of heavy fighting before Kovel in the near future. It is said that the pause in the Russian advance was owing to the necessity of improving the roads behind the Russian front. These are mostly ordinary country highways, and metalled roads, which are required for heavy transport, are rare. For several months the Russians have had large forces of laborers engaged behind their front improving transport conditions in order that they may launch another big offensive. Knowledge is lacking outside of the Russian war zone as to how for advanced these preparations are. On the Russian front the lines of the enemy in Volhynia were investi He was married seven months ago to Miss Wanless, of Port Arthur. Two Street Cars Collide

On the front north of Salonica the French fought a brilliant action, and Mrs. H. Mitchell, 246 Carlton street, and Mrs. Coutts, 446 Wellesley street, were badly bruised and shaken up when two Winchester cars collided at the terminal on Winchester street late Saturday night. The accident was caused by an east-bound car trying to enter the "Y" before the west-bould car had cleared. Both women were taken home. they captured Gardilovo, a village in the vicinity of the Cerna River, and a system of Bulgarian trenches between Kenali and the river. The Serbians system of Bulgarian trenches between Kenali and the river. The Serbians also fought local actions and took some Bulgarian trenches. The British, across the Struma River, repulsed a Bulgarian counter-attack in the region north of Ormanli. An active artillery struggle continues on the allies' left wing, and a French battery exploded an ammunition depot near Volushina,

A considerable increase in active service enlistments is anticipated this week, owing to the new Queen's Own Rifles Overseas Battalion now being in the field. The orderly room of the Q. O.
