Stocks were tobogganing. Union Pacific, to mention only one exception, went to par. A little more than a year ago it was 196. For a ten per cent. stock this decline was utterly absurd.

President Thomas, of the stock exchange, reached President Stillman, of the National City Bank, and urged the absolute necessity of immediate monetary relief. There was an abundance of good securities, but there was no cash. The $25,000,000 in currency that had been turned into the banks by Secretary Cortelyou from the vaults of the sub-treasury, were absorbed by the local banking situation.

Mr. Stillman said: "There are only two men in the country who can help you—Secretary Cortelyou and J. P. Morgan."
It was a question of seconds rather than minutes. Mr. Morgan was reached by telephone. The result was that Aubrey Hodges, of the firm of Halstead & Hodges, one of Morgan's brokers, rushed on to the stock exchange floor in five minutes, and, raising his voice above the din, called: "I am authorized by Mr. J. P. Morgan to place $25,000,000 at call loan."

The tide was stemmed. Prices rebounded in an instant. Morgan had the actual cash to make good. The street knew that. As a matter of fact it had been understood right along that Morgan was really the only man whose name was prominently mentioned in connection with the movement of stocks, who had any real money at all.

The meeting lasted for an hour and fifteen minutes. In that time Mr. Morgan became possessed of inside information concerning the condition of every bank up to lighten the burden the banks are carrying. He knew that the United States Steel Corporation was in position to place $75,000,000 in cash in New York banks should the necessity arise. He knew that the United States treasury could be called upon to furnish relief to any extent to avoid a widespread panic at such a critical period in the administration of President Roosevelt.

Mr. Morgan learned, in addition, that the banks which have sustained visible runs are not the only institutions affected by the fright of the public. There is not a bank in the city that has not been subjected to a steady drain of cash since Monday morning. Depositors with been subjected to a steady drain of cash since Monday morning. Depositors with their savings or their working capital, in the hands of bankers, have watched closely all the published reports about financial conditions.

With all this knowledge of banking conditions in his possession Mr. Morgan returned to his banking house. In his absence his favorite and trusted partners, Charles Steele and George W. Perkins, had been gathering up the reins of control in readiness to place them in his hands. Within a few minutes after seating himself and setting fire to a big cigar, the Within a few minutes after seating himself and setting fire to a big cigar, the financial interests of New York and incidentally of the United States, were in the range of his powerful grip.
