DANGEROUS TO PICK AT A SORE CORN

The razor or jack-knife way of paring and gouging out corns is but a temporary relief, and very often causes blood poisoning. To quickly relieve the pain and surely lift out the corn, apply Putnam's Painless Corn and Wart Extractor, the only sure remedy for sore foot lumps, warts, callouses, bunions and corns. Its name tells the story—Putnam's Painless Corn and Wart Extractor, 25c. per bottle.

Radway's Ready Relief

Sun and Wind Bring Out Ugly Spots. How to Remove Easily.

Here's a chance, Miss Freckle-face, to try a remedy for freckles with the guarantee of a reliable dealer that it will not cost you a penny unless it removes the freckles; while if it does give you a clear complexion the expense is trifling.

Simply get an ounce of ointment—double strength from any druggist and a few applications should show you how easy it is to rid yourself of the honey freckles and get a beautiful complexion. Rarely is more than one ounce needed for the worst case.

Be sure to ask the druggist for the double strength ointment as this is the prescription sold under guarantee of money back if it fails to remove freckles.

CURES LUMBAGO

Radway's Ready Relief should be well rubbed over a large surface, until a glow is produced, with a firm motion. Few cases require the Ready Relief. Some do, when a dose or two would be taken.

LITERARY LETTER

Identity of "Victor a Cross" at Last Established—Cuss Words in Novels

(Times Special Correspondence)

London, May 29.—What in reality is "Victoria Cross" who wrote "Anna Lombard" and "Life's Shop Window" and who numbers her readers by the hundreds of thousands? So far as the present writer knows, the actual identity of this successful authoress, whose sales cannot be far behind those of Marie Corelli, and who now, it seems, is about to woo the favor of the high gods, not to mention the gallery ones, as a playwright, never yet has been disclosed in print.

It is satisfactory, accordingly to be able to supply the answer to a literary riddle that has puzzled many, as well as to tell the story of this writer's curiously interesting fight for recognition exactly as one heard it, the other day, from the authoress herself.

"Victoria Cross" is the pen-name of Miss Vivien Cory Griffin, and this writer is a sister of "Laurence Hope" poet, who wrote the "Indian Love Lyrics" and the "Garden of Karma." What is more Miss Griffin, who lives in Hampstead, London, an "literary suburb," is a B. A. of London University, classical student, and the mistress of many tongues. Whenever she visits a new country, in fact, which is pretty often, as she is a great traveler, she writes in language as a matter of course, and she has studied Sanskrit, Persian and Hindustani as well as the modern European languages.

"I began to write," she said "at an early age, five to be exact. My father and mother were both of literary tastes. My father, who was an officer in the Bengal cavalry, spent much of his spare time in writings, and contributed articles to the "Civil and Military Gazette" of Lahore, the journal where Kipling's first work appeared. He encouraged me in my childish attempts, and it was not very long before some of the nursery romances were committed to paper. I used to spend my pocket money on foiscap instead of on sweets, for I was very much in earnest about writing even then. When I was thirteen or fourteen I had a short story in some small magazine, and by the time I was seventeen I had written no fewer than six or seven novels. I was never in any doubt about my career as an author. I felt that I possessed a gift, and it was a delight to me to use it. Writing has always been as natural to me as talking or walking.

"My first appearance in any magazine of note was in the "Yellow Book" for which I wrote, "Theodora." Then Mr. Lane, who published that famous quarterly, issued his book "The Woman Who Dined." I followed this up with "Paul" and then came "A Girl of the Klondyke."

"At this period I had secured some recognition, but I had not as yet made a name for myself. I was to do that with "Anna Lombard." I got the book published only with great difficulty, for which has since sold some quarter of a million copies and been translated into many languages. I think that twenty firms of publishers refused it on one ground or another. But my faith in it remained unshaken, for I am a most conceited person and thoroughly believed in myself and my book. At the end of a score of refusals I made up my mind that I could not wait for ever to find a publisher prepared to take the risk of buying my book, so I decided to do so myself. The book came out with a publisher in the ordinary way, and I paid for the cost of production.

"After the success of "Anna Lombard" I had already written out of my desk and given them to the publishers, who were quite ready to accept them now. I followed up "Anna Lombard" with "Tomorrow" "Six Chapters of a Man's Life" and many more, till last year, I produced the "Night of Temptation." I am now turning my attention to the drama, and have written a play on the theme of a new novel, "The Greater Law" which is appearing this month."

George Edgar, who wrote "The Pride of the Fanny" and whose latest novel "Swift Nick of the York Road," is said by the critics to be fine stuff, has been telling amusingly of his experience with "swear words" in fiction. This, of course, apropos of the discussion, which appears to be inexhaustible, over Shaw's use of the word, "bloody," in his play "Pygmalion."

"I know a dozen editors," he says, "who will not tolerate the word 'God' as an exclamation. 'Damn' in one of my short tales came out as 'dear me.' I passed the editorial alteration in the interests of the laugh it gave me. 'Rip me' in another of my tales, read finally as 'scatter me'—a nice editorial discrimination this, and one I also like. I know one dear editor who would not pass a plain 'Devil take you' to save his life—'Devil take you' as 'saints alive, man.' I do not know how he arrived at this, but anyway he did arrive. I once tried to blast you on an editor, for the purpose of developing a vigorous situation. The phrase reached its readers as 'bless you.' I recall a hundred more editorial interferences between my bad language—which is not very bad—and its readers. I need not bore you with further examples. But I may be permitted to give a classic revision—the jest of a literary lifetime. My character was speaking in the manner of the Georgian buck-in-damme, sir, I made him say. And the nice old editor rendered it, 'But, tut-tut, sir, I need the money, as usual; but you cannot say 'tut-tut' to me to day, without giving your author a laugh—the kind of snail to be found on the face of the tiger."

RULE OF THE ROAD AT SEA

The Imperial Merchant Service Guild have been invited by the British Board of Trade to consider several important suggestions concerning alterations to Articles 2, 10, 14, 15 and 81 of the international regulations for preventing collisions at sea. These suggestions include the making of a second mast-head light compulsory; the provision of a fixed stern light; a special signal for motor vessels proceeding under sail and mechanical power simultaneously; a suitable sound signal for a vessel in tow, or for the last vessel of the tow; and an addition to the distress signals by the inclusion of the radiotelegraph distress signal. The board of trade have requested the Imperial Merchant Service Guild, which represents approximately 75 per cent of the total British captains and officers to send a representative to discuss the matter with the board of trade at Whitehall.
