A Foolish Pose
By RUTH CAMERON

LOVE that selfish love again,
Finds the barter naught but pain;
Love that giveth in full store,
Aye receives as much and more—
Love, exacting nothing back,
Never, knoweth any lack;
Love, compelling love to pay,
Sues him bankrupt, every day.

—Michael Field.
Do you know her—the girl who thinks it smart and attractive to parade the love some luckless man feels for her; tell you "how perfectly wild about her" he is; expatiate on his devotion, and at the same time, assure you that she cares absolutely nothing for him?
—Of course you do. We all do.
She lives in every town, in every neighborhood—I had almost said on every street.

It seems to me that this attitude is one of the most unpleasant, as well as one of the most universal, faults of the young woman of the present day.
Perhaps of the young women of yesterday. I'm not saying they were any better. Only I just wasn't acquainted with them.
To love is the greatest thing in the world.
To be loved is only secondary.

The greatest tragedy in life is not to have inspired love, but not to have loved.
The beautiful woman who drives half a dozen men half wild with love, and never once feels the stirring of it within herself, seems to me a greater failure in life than the girl who secretly loves her heart out for the man who never even knows.

The power of love inspired has never stood back of any great work, while the power of love felt, even when unreturned—perhaps more often under this condition—has been the motive power of much of the greatest work of the world.
When will our girls realize these facts and cease to think it something to be proud of when men love them and they are unable to feel in return the stirring of that wonderful self-obliterating thing—genuine love?

Dora Melegari, a Russian philosopher, makes a whimsical, but thought-provoking, little guess about the strange attitude.
"Perhaps it is because, being conscious of our own unworthiness, we despise others instinctively for the love they give us," she suggests.
Perhaps that is what actuates this kind of girl, although I doubt very much if she would admit it if she were taxed with it.

But the strangest thing about this girl who assures you so vigorously that she cares nothing for this man who is "so wild about her" is the fact that half the time she is telling you a lie.
Half the time she does care for him, only with that same perverse belief that it is finer to inspire love than to feel it, she likes to pretend that she doesn't.
Silly little girl.

I could almost find it in my heart to wish that her folly might lose her the precious jewel she holds so lightly—a mutual love.
Ah, no, I couldn't quite wish that—only that it might bring her to the brink of loss and teach her to cherish this priceless treasure as it should be.

Beware of the dealer who tries to sell you a substitute.
Mr. Jno. R. Childerhouse, Orillia, Ont., writes:—"When in Fort William, last summer, I was taken sick with diarrhoea, and became so weak and suffered such great pain, I had to quit work. Our manager advised me to try Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry, so on my way home I bought a bottle, and after taking four doses I was cured. We always keep a bottle in the house. We have also used it for our children, and find it an excellent remedy for summer complaint."

LA MARQUISE DE FONTENOY
Speaker's Chair and Mace of the Last Irish Parliament—Marquis of Donegal Lord High Admiral of Lough Neagh
(Copyright, 1912, by the Brentwood Company)

Lord and Lady Massereene, who sailed on Saturday last from New York for England, on the last lap of a tour around the world, after a trip across the continent from San Francisco, are a very interesting pair. The viscount, who won the Distinguished Service Order as a major of the 17th Lancers during the South African war, where he was badly wounded, is, through his mother, a grandson of a famous sporting novelist, Major Whyte Melville, and among his most cherished treasures at Antrim Court, near Antrim, which is his principal country seat in Ireland, are the speaker's chair and mace of the last Irish parliament in Dublin, both of which his ancestor, John Foster, appropriated when called upon to pronounce the doom of the Irish House of Commons upon the passage of the union bill, of which he was one of the most bitter and determined opponents.

By the terms of his will, the mace is held in trust by his heirs "until the body that entrusted it to my keeping"—the Irish parliament—"should demand it again." This, of course, cannot be done until home rule is secured for the Emerald Isle.
This John Foster was famed throughout Ireland as "the incorruptible." While his wife was created Viscountess Ferrard in her own right, he received, twenty-one years after the union, the Barony of Oriskany of the United Kingdom, which gave him a seat in the House of Lords. Their son Henry, second Viscount Ferrard, and second Lord Oriskany, married, in 1810, Harriet Skelington, Viscountess Massereene in her own right. She was the daughter of the last and fourth Earl of Massereene, who was also the eighth viscount of that title. The Viscountcy of Massereene having been originally conferred by Charles II. on Sir Charles Clotworthy as a reward for the part he played in promoting the restoration. As Sir Charles had no male issue, the king made his patent with reference to the holder's son-in-law, Sir John Skelington, and his heirs general. In fact, the Viscountcy of Massereene is the only Irish peerage that can descend in the female line.

As the present Lord and Lady Massereene have no son, but only a daughter, the Hon. Diana Skelington, now three years old, it is she who will inherit the peerage, as the thirteenth holder of it, while the Viscountcy of Ferrard and the Barony of Oriskany will go to a distant cousin, the Hon. Diana Skelington, a bachelor of sixty-two.

Antrim Castle, the home of Lord Massereene, is a huge edifice standing amid pleasant woods, almost on the shore of Lough Neagh, the largest lake in Great Britain, and the sixth largest in Europe, being sixty-three miles in circumference with an area of square miles.
The first viscount kept a fleet of boats on Lough Neagh, for service during the wars against Cromwell and with this he took a Cromwellian fort and many prisoners. The second viscount and several of his successors maintained the fleet on the lake, but the famous little navy has long since vanished, although the hereditary office of lord high admiral of Lough Neagh survives to this day in the possession of the nine-year old Marquis of Donegal, whose mother is a daughter of Henry St. Twining of Halifax.

Lady Massereene is a Scotchwoman, of remarkable beauty, a daughter of John Ainsworth, liberal member of parliament for Argyllshire. A sister of Lord Massereene's, Verah, who was married to Rev.

Charles J. Johnston, came rather prominently into public notice some years ago when, reduced by difference with her relatives to financial straits, she took to "doing ballad turns" in the Belfast Hippodrome under the stage name of "Madame Separance."

Emperor Nicholas of Russia has just lost by death one of the most notable dignitaries of his court, his grand marshal, Prince Alexander Dolgorouki, popularly known as "Sandy." He was a great favorite in the St. Petersburg grand monde, while the salons of his three sisters, Madame Albedinski, Princess Soltkoff and Countess Stenbach, exercised a notable influence, not only upon the Muscovite great world, but even in political affairs.

The Dolgoroukis have always been among the most influential families in Russia, and are descended from St. Vladimir, the first to bear the name of Dolgorouki being George, who flourished in the twelfth century and received it as a nickname—it means "long arm"—on account of his martial prowess. The first Romanoff emperor, Cesar Michael, married a Princess Dolgorouka, and Peter II. died in 1730 on the very day appointed for his marriage to another princess of that house, Catherine Dolgorouka, now an exile from Russia, is the incorporeal widow of Cesar Alexander II., the liberator of the serfs.

It is to Prince Vassili of that ilk, a celebrated general, and lover of Empress

Catherine the Great, that Russia is indebted for the conquest of the Crimea, and one Ivan Dolgorouki was among the greatest of Russian poets. In fact, the name figures on every page of Russian history for the last hundred years.

The recent celebration of the bicentenary of the birth of Jean Jacques Rousseau, was the occasion of a pilgrimage to his tomb in the so-called "Desert d'Ermenoville" on the part of the members of the Institute of France, to which the property and the tomb were bequeathed by the late Mme. Edouard Andre. The Chateau d'Ermenoville was built on the site of an older chateau by the Marquis Rene de Girardin, who hid out the grounds in the style of an English park. He was Rousseau's last and best friend, and it was at Ermenoville that Rousseau found refuge in his last days, and where he died.

It is fortunate that the Institute of France should now be in possession of an engraver named Jacquemart, and of an American saleswoman. She secured the hand of the late Edouard Andre, an hereditary partner of the great Protestant banking house of Andre in Paris. He left her all his immense wealth, Mme Andre's was outraged except by those who had something to obtain from her, not only on account of her antecedents, but also because of her behavior. Her arrogance, after Andre's death had made her one of the richest women in France, was intolerable, and the affronts to which she subjected the persons unscrupulous or foolish enough to accept her hospitality, went almost beyond belief.

The recent bequest of her vast fortune, her great mansion in Paris (with its priceless art collections and her chateaux and estates, including Ermenoville), to the Institute of France, was a source of surprise, and there are few who hold that, notwithstanding the artistic, historic and monetary value of the property, it would have been wiser in keeping with the dignity of the Institute to have refused it.
