A SURPRISE.

She was tall and pretty, with deep hazel eyes, and heavy, glossy braids of dark brown hair, and her complexion was like that of a 4-year old child, as she stood in the window, with the afternoon sunshine upon her face and form. Mr. Errol sat opposite watching her

Olive's eyes fell, and a troubled expression came over her face. 'I must try to obtain a situation as teacher,' she said, softly.

"That will be pleasant," remarked Mr. Errol, ironically.

orphans as well as herself to his heart. Yet she checked herself, even in the AND ARRIVING thought. What right had she to expect him to burden himself with those cares and trials, simply because they came to her as a charge water No; it impossible for her to put away? No; it her folly. Mess Pork, came to her as a charge which it was was folly, and worse than folly, for her to sit brooding here when the matter was fully and irrevocably decided. The brief glimpse of sunshine which had brightened her life in the prospects of George Errol's love and a home of her own should shine no more for her; there was no use in turning away from the leaden-gray pathway which stretched out before her girl footsteps. There was one comfort; the poor little orphans should never feel the loss of a mother's love while she lived to cherish and toil for them.

Duty is often a bitter cup to drink, but it seldom comes in quite so uninvit ing a guise as was now held to poor Olive Merton's lips.

Miss Agatha Errol, her former fiance's sister, dropped in a few days afterward-a stout, bustling maiden of 20, who kept house for George, scolded him, mended his stockings and put all Coofish Large & Medium the loose buttons on his shirts. 'Packing your trunks, eh?' said Miss Agatha. 'Going to move?' 'Of course; I cannot continue t board in so expensive a place,' said Miss Merton sadly. "I shall soon have to maintain the children as well as myself.'

"Humph!" said Miss Agatha; "so you still persist in setting up an orphan asylum on a small scale. Rather a Quixotic business, I think."

Olive was silent. "When do you expect 'em from the west?" pursued Miss Errol.
"On Tuesday of next week."

"What train?" "There are two, but I shall not look for them until the latest, which comes

"I hope they are nice children, said Miss Agatha, doubtfully. "One cannot help loving children, said Olive, earnestly. "My dear, you are an enthusiast." " Perhaps I am," said Olive, smiling faintly, "but I can't help it."

"Well," said Miss Agatha, jumping briskly up, "I must be going; I wish you joy of your new undertaking, Olive."

"You will come and see me sor times ?" said Olive, wistfully. "Y-yes," said Agatha, rubbing her chin. "I will come sometimes," " And," Olive hesitated, "you have not told me yet how George is." "George? Oh, he's pretty well," said Agatha; "good-bye!" And away she went.

Tuesday evening of the next week came, and Olive Merton tied on her hood and water-proof cloak, for it was a dismal drizzly twilight, and went a dismal drizzly twilight, and went down to the depot to meet the little John McLaggan. western travellers, whom she called "her new children."

But though she stood on the platform But though she stood on the platform and watched every passenger descend from the long train, there were no little Evelyns there.

"And-and the children?" faltered Olive looking down at the little ones, who were clinging to her dress with joyful, welcoming cries.

"They shall be ours, dear Olive!"

"But I thought, George, that you "Gord duty should always be pleasant, George."

The voice was subdued and pained. Mr. Errol rose.

"Since you have chosen your path I know of nothing that is left me save to bid you good-bye!"

"Good-bye, George; try to think kindly of me,' she faltered, her little hand trembling in his palm as a frightened bird flutters sometimes beneath the human grasp.

And so they parted, these lovers who a brief while ago had been all in all to each other. And Olive Merton dropped into a chair, burying her face in her hands as soon as he was gone. She had hoped, she had fancied, she knew not what—perhaps that George would approve of her self imposed duty, and cheer her with his love in its performance; nay, it even crossed her mind, so a remote possibility, that he might even take the poor little orphasus as well as herself to his heart.

"But I thought, George, that you disapproved —"
"So I did, Olive at first, but when my sober senses came back to me I could not but see what a selfish brute I had shown myself, and what an angel you were. I had loved you before, dearest—how I reverenced the spirit of self-sacrifice and devotion which you had shown in contradistinction to my own coldness and brutality! So I thought the least reparation I could make would be to make ready the brightest home I could devise for my little wife that is to be. Do you like it, darling?"

Did she like it? What was the use of asking her the question, when the answer shone so radiantly on her face!

And this was one of the very, very few cases in which duty proves its own reward.

THE GLOBE has special arrangements by which it possesses the sole right in Caparitic of the leading writers of fiction, such as Wilkie Collins, Miss Braddon, Justin McCarthy, B. L. Farjeon, Sarah Douchey, William Black, Mrs. Oliphant, Hugh Conway, and others.

A story of enthralling interest, entitled WYLLARD'S WEIRD, by Miss Braddon, is now running in The Dally and Weekly Globe, and will be continued till completed. It will be succeeded by a story from the powerful pen of JUSTIN McCarthy, and after the last named story is completed there will follow one from R. L. FARJEON, the famous novelist.

In addition to the regular continued story, there are always running in the 12 and 3 o'clock editions of Dally, and in THE WEERLY GLOBE one or more additional novels by authors of world-wide repute. In this manner readers get five or six complete novels each year.
