Employers' Liability Bill. Hon. Mr. Pugsley introduced a bill re-lating to the liabilities of employers for injuries to workmen. He explained that in most particulars the bill was similar to that of last year, but there was one important difference. This bill had given the government a great deal of thought, the subject being attended with much difficulty. There was a strong feeling that those who were engaged in lumbering operations, such as steam driving, should be exempt from the operation of this bill, and in the case of those persons the law would remain as it is at present. who is holding a position which is at the mercy of the government. That is a great advance in the direction megligence on the part of the foreman. That is a great advance in the direction of liability, but we thought it wise to extend it to such cases and along the lines of advanced legislation. We have not yielded to the demands to make an employer liable for the negligence of a fellow servant, who is not a foreman or entitled to give orders. We have, how-ever, made to this rule two important ex-ceptions. We have provided that where a workman is injured by the negligence of a man who has charge of signals or points on a railway, the liability attaches, and also where a workman is injured by the negligence of a man who is in charge of a winch or an engine on board a ship that The death occurred recently at North Brockfield (Mass.) of Michael Varrily, father of Rev.
