dicates the likelihood that this must be so, because vegetation and the ground covered with vegetation absorb water and allow it to percolate slowly to the lower levels, whereas on bare ground the rainwater runa quickly away to sea. But trees serve another purpose in aid of agriculture; because, as some recent experiments show, they act as windbreaks and shelters to growing crops. The disshow, they act as windbreaks and shelters to growing crops. The distance to which the protective induces of trees extends is estimated at twenty times their height, though complete protection, such as might be afforded to growing wheat in a gale extends only to a distance of eight times the height of the trees. Partial protection is about twelve to four-teen times the height. They also check evaporation of rainfall, their inducence extending five times the height to windward and eighteen times to becward, and preserve as much as 70 per cent. of moisture ordinarily lost. Finally, their influence heats both sir and soil, increasing the diargal range of temperature by as much as nine degrees Pahrenheit.
