

THE TORONTO WORLD. SATURDAY MORNING, NOV. 22, 1884.

An Economic Science Association. The Peterboro Review in a well reasoned and well written article advocates the formation of an association "for the promotion of economic science."

Canada and the British Connection. In the December number of the Atlantic Monthly there appears a highly interesting paper on the above subject by Edward Stanwood.

Mr. Stanwood begins by asserting that "not one Canadian out of a hundred has ever brought himself to the belief that change in the relations between Great Britain and the Dominion would be desirable under any circumstances."

The purpose of the paper is to examine the effect upon our material interests, of the relation in which we stand to Great Britain, the limitations it imposes upon our freedom and progress, and the possibilities which a career as an independent country might open to us.

But, strange to say—and this brings up the other point in which economic science is singular—there is, in spite of its difficulty, no other science on which people generally feel so competent to express an opinion. The man who would never dream of giving his views as to the atomic theory of matter, or the age of a coal measure, or the part played by germs in syphilis disease, has no hesitation in giving an explanation of commercial depression and fluctuations, in preferring one kind of taxation to another, in assigning to various forms of industry their relative degrees of importance, and so on through the whole round of topics comprised within the economic circumference.

Now, partly because economic is so difficult a science, and partly because in spite of its difficulty every one feels at liberty to dogmatize about both its principles and their application, even if there were no other reason for it, such an association as the Review proposes would be a good institution. Especially would it be so in this country where the subject is almost ignored in our universities, and where, on account of the want of properly organized methods of collecting statistics there is great uncertainty as to the facts. Indeed, one of the most obvious and most useful results likely to flow from the work of an active society of the kind, would be a keener appreciation of the value of statistics, and greater perfection of the machinery for collecting facts.

We hope Mr. Carnegie will take the matter up and press it on the public. He will meet with a hearty response from many of our most intelligent thinkers and publicists, and we feel safe in promising them the hearty co-operation of earnest economic students and observers in this city. Let us have a convention called as soon as possible.

The Pay of Women. The return of Hugh McCulloch to the secretaryship of the treasury, at the invitation of President Arthur, recalls an incident worth remembering. When S. F. Chase held the same office under Lincoln he devised the present national bank system, and induced Mr. McCulloch, who was then president of the State bank of Indiana, to undertake the organization of the bureau of currency. In this work he was assisted by three colleagues, two of whom were women. One of these, Miss Minnie Wilson, some time afterward, married a Dr. McCormick, and when in the brief space of two years she became a widow, Mr. McCulloch, then secretary of the treasury, made her an offer of her old position. She gratefully accepted it, and has now been discharging its duties for fifteen years. During ten of them she received only $800 a year, and only since September last has she been receiving as much as $1400—a much smaller stipend than a man would receive in her place. If Mr. Cleveland will signalize his accession to office by a determined effort to secure for women the same remuneration as men when they do the same kind and amount of work, the women's suffrage association, which strenuously opposed him at this election, might aid in securing for him a second term.

A Kindly Thought. One of the most graceful of the many magnificent acts of the Astors on the occasion of the marriage of Miss Caroline Astor and Mr. Orme Wilson was a grand dinner given to all the patients of Bellevue hospital, some five hundred in number. The banquet seems from all accounts to have been of the choicest kind and dainties were in profusion. Hospitals are unfortunate in being to a great extent outside the circle of individual charity. Each person, i. e., amongst those who make a habit of visiting and supplying the wants of the ill and the indigent, each person has usually his or her small circle of sick and poor, but the hospital belongs to no one; it is supported by the taxes, and to none but those who are brought in actual contact with its officials or its patients is it brought prominently into notice. This is true of all hospitals generally. Toronto we may almost call an exception:

both its religious and temporal welfare received the consideration of a large class of benevolent people. Still too much can never be done, and a glimpse of the suffering within its walls will do more to open the benevolent heart than reams of print. We recommend our readers to try the experiment; perhaps then Mr. Astor's report might have a rival in Toronto.

American young ladies who have been abroad assert that it is dreadfully hard to find a honest count.

—Jacob Lookman, Buffalo, N. Y., says he has been using Dr. Thomas' Electric Oil for rheumatism; he has such a lame back he can do anything, and he has one bottle here, to use his own expression, "I cured him up."

—Peter Kiefer, Buffalo, says: "I was badly bitten by a horse a few days ago, and was induced by a friend, who witnessed the occurrence, to try Dr. Thomas' Electric Oil. It relieved the pain almost immediately, and in four days the wound was completely healed. Nothing can be better for fresh wounds than this oil."

—West Toronto Junction is within a few minutes of the Union station by the means of either the Erie or the Ontario and the Grand Trunk or the Northern. Real estate in the neighborhood has steadily risen in value and promises to advance rapidly. Some of the best lots in West Toronto are to be had from George Clarke, 290 Yonge street.

—Mr. H. McCaw, Custom House, Toronto, writes: "My wife has been troubled with dyspepsia and rheumatism for a long time; the trial many different medicines, but did not get any relief until she used Dr. Thomas' Electric Oil. It is acknowledged by Northern & Lyman's Vegetable Discovery and Dyspeptic Cure. It has taken two bottles of it, and now she feels in better health than she has been for years."

"GEORGINA'S RE"

A NEW AND FASCINATING TRUE STORY.

BY HENRY JAMES and when Georgina declared couldn't go home, that she with her and not with her mother could not expose herself—she and that she must remain and her only till the day she said, the poor lady was forced that day a reality. She was mastered, she was calmed, at a certain extent, fascinated, to accept Georgina's rigidity none of her own to oppose was only violent, she was not and once she did this, it was all, that to take her young Europe was to help her, and her alone was not to help her, she literally frightened Mrs. Portico into compliance. She was capable of strange things if the her own devices. So, from another Mrs. Portico influence was really at last about to foreign lands (her doctor had her that she didn't look out, got too old to enjoy them, and had invited that healthy Miss who could stand so long on her her own devices. So, from of Georgina at the annual for, though the danger was over a great general advantage to go, and the prospect of an elated at the prospect of an a There was a danger that a meet Mr. Benyon on the other hand, but that Mrs. Portico, Mrs. Portico would lend herself of that kind. If she had take her head for favor their love a done, there was no marriage, there was, of course, to a con degree; but nothing more was should start nothing more was the motive of the journey. No said, that is, till the night be sailed; then a few words passed Georgina had already leave of her relatives in Toronto and was to sleep at Mrs. Portico to go down to the ship at the other end of the world. The two ladies were a together in the streets, conscious of corded lung the elder one suddenly remark companion that she seemed to a great deal upon herself in that Raymond Benyon would her hand. He might choose to lodge his child, if she did were promises and promises, a people would consider they let of when circumstances altered. She would have more thought.

"I know what I am about," answered. "There is only one for him, but that's because by circumstances being altered. "Everything seems to be altered," poor Mrs. Portico murmured tranquilly. "You have chosen him well," said Mrs. Portico, who by this returned to a kind of bewildered quiescence. "Of course I have chosen him in such a matter as this he will be splendid!" Then suddenly Georgina said, "I don't know why I him!" she repeated, with a fit congruous passion.

This seemed to Mrs. Portico to the point of being sublime had given up trying to understand that the girl might say or understand less and less, after this time in a pretty bad way, time southward; and she was least of all when in the mid-winter, the event came off with imagination, she had tried to herself, but which, when it seemed to her beyond measure and dreadful. It took place at a country house, and she had that there would be more privilege than in a little; and it to America that both Mrs. Portico and Georgina were in the States, and it was not thought that absent New-Yorkers should linger in a seaport where they find apartments, according to G report, in a palace painted in Van Dyke and Titian. Georgina letters omitted, it will be seen, that could give color to Mrs. long stay at Genoa. In such a where the travelers hired two rooms for the most insignificant remarkably fine boy came into it. Nothing could have been more Mrs. Portico was almost appalling facility and felicity of it. She this time in a pretty bad way, what had never happened to her in her life—she suffered from depression of spirits. She had to lie, and now she was lying time. Everything she wrote home that had been said or done in connection with her stay at Genoa.
