lad Dogs Betray Their Madness Treatment of Wounds. (From London Truth.)

As there can be no doubt that hydrophobia has been mest exceptionally prevalent in England, and more especially in London, during this year, I felt that it might be a matter of interest to my readers to know a little about this much-dreaded disease; and have consulted an expert- The master or mistress, as the case may Mr. A. J. without provocation he will at times give tongue to a dismal short howl, or to what would perhaps be better described as half a howl and half a bark. He will gnaw at anything that comes in his way. If he be in a room he will bite at the chair legs, or the carpet, or at a table-cloth; and if in a bennel he will attack the corners of it. He will also attempt to masticate stones, and will readily consume straw and filth of any kind. Another early symptom is the disposition to bite other doge—in fact, a rabid animal will unhesitatingly attack a dog or cat with which he may have lived for years on the most friendly terms.

During the whole time that these symptoms are developing themselves the such absurd answers—which are drawn of the such as the such absurd answers—which are drawn of the such as the such as the such absurd answers—which are drawn of the such as the such as buring the whole time that these symptoms are developing themselves the dog will still remain under his master's or mistress's control, and will, to a certain extent, obey orders, although, perhaps, not so cheerfully as usual—A fact which is, I expect, responsible for owners so often scorning the idea that their pet can is a larve mountain with a hole at the panimal is a victim to rables.

often soorning the idea that their pet animal is a victim to rables.

The dumb or paralytic rables is recognizable by the lower jaw dropping considerably and by the mouth being continually open. When suffering from this form of the disease the animal is not quite so ferocious; still, his saliva is as dead y as in the case of the ordinary rables. The idea that rable dogs fear water is altogether fallacious. They have no such fear, but at the commencement of the attack drink large quantities, though they are not able to do so in the later stages in consequence.

When an animal shows symptoms of the disease it should be at once securely chained up, as, although it is practically harmless in the early stages to those whom it knows, it is not so with strangers. It often we that a veternary surgeon is sent for to see a dog that is ailing, and on his arrival he is shown in by himself to a room where the animal is loose and can pounce out upon him at any moment. Such conduct on the part of owners is unpardonable. Mr. Sewell believes that the universal use of the muzzle would act most favorably in the way of lessening the is a difference of opinion between medical men as to which is the best cautery—some recommending one kind and others another. The nitrate of silver in the form of the pencil is very effectual for superficial wounds and scratches, but for a deep puncture the free application of nitric and is best, as it is far more penetrating.

But it is needless to say that prevention is far better than cure, and it is for this reason that I have detailed the various symptoms that point to rabies, with the hope that owners of dogs will not hesitate to at once send for a veterinary surgeon should they see the slightest sign of thair animals developing either or all of them.

THE EVILS OF CRAMMING. me Answers Given at Examinations

English Children. From the Newcastle Chronicle. Under the cramming system so religious ly-so fanatically pursued, it is not sur prising to find that the juvenile' mind makes a bash of its supposed learning. School examinations are, to a great extent, parrot-like or mechanical performance ground up day after day with little thought or care of their understanding.

It is the reason why it is of a different great deal of this increase is due to the disgraceful folly and wicked carelessness of the owners of dogs that happen to be affected. Rabies does not come on suddenly and if owners would pay a little more attention to the signs that precede an attack the disease would not be transferred, as it is at present, from one dog to several others; nor, what is far worse, to individuals.

Rabies is liable to attack dogs of any breed or sex, though statistics seem to show that it is more common among males than females.

With regard to the early symptoms, an animal that has the disease invariably loses its appetite; and though this is common to the majority of complaints, its should not be ignored, but should act as a warning to owners to watch for ether symptoms, which, in the case of rabies, speedily develop. The dog's manner changes; he shows a disposition to hide himself in corners or under chairs; in fact, anywhere, so as to get out of sight. Then he will never rest in one place for long together, but is continually changing his position, and appears to be constantly on the watch. His bark, too, is altered, and without provocation he will at times give tongue to a dismarch the gender from the sun. The inquiry, is the reason why it is of a different gender from the sun. From the Chicago Times.

Twenty-five years ago Chicago had 112 a 000 inhabitants; to-day her population is not less than 750,000, and it is pretty certain to approximate a million when the next census is taken. In 1910, if the present ratio of increase is maintained, Chicago will be a more populous city than London is to-day.
