To the Editor of the Monitor: DEAR SIR .- There is oft times a disposition on the part of us as the great "common people," to find fault with, critize and even to "cuss" the local newspaper. We are difficult to please, and we know exactly how a newspaper should be run. We understand that better, than the reason why we should occasionally pay up our subscriptions. It strikes us as passing strange that the obstinate editor should be so nig-headed in refusing to follow our valuable advice in getting out his paper. It wouldn't take over about half a million pages an issue and the editor would probably live several weeks, if he followed the advice of everybody in the community.

Besides it would be lots of fun-while it lasted. But after all, Mr. Editor, with all our propensities to offer you advice, and all the "kicking" and criticism in which we are so prone to indulge, when we sit down and calmly reflect upon the subject-as we some times do we are forced to admit that with all your faults and short-comings. from our point of view-and with all
