Valedictory, '09.

The months have come and gone, the year has passed and the holidays of the "good old summer time" are with us again, and we are preparing to enjoy them. Shall we ever again stand in the same relation to these annual days of rest and recreation? Scarcely.

To the senior class these days mean much. The coveted diploma we hope at last to possess. Would that we had not to pay such a price for it. That we might possess it, and all that goes with it, we have in the months, happy months that have passed, worked hard, and it is now a matter of
