■ At press time, the possibility of the Olympic Games being decertified was under discussion between Canada and the International Olympic Committee because of Taiwan athletes' wish to represent China. Canada, which recognizes the People's Republic of China, has not had diplomatic relations with Taiwan since 1971. IOC President, Lord Killanin, who arrived in Montreal July 5, said he would meet with other members of the Committee as they arrived, but a settlement would probably take a few days. ### Capital celebrates 150th birthday

Canada's capital, Ottawa (once called Bytown) celebrates its one-hundred and fiftieth birthday this year.

It all began in 1800 when timber interests discovered the frontier area bounded by three rivers, the Ottawa, Gatineau and Rideau.

But it was not until autumn 1826 that a name was given to the new community – Bytown, after Lieutenant-Colonel John By from England, who supervised construction of a new waterway, the Rideau Canal.

In 1855, the name was changed to Ottawa, and in January 1858, Queen Victoria chose the city as the new capital of Canada.

Today, By's masterwork, the Rideau Canal, contributes greatly to the enjoyment of life in the national capital region. In winter it becomes what is believed to be the longest man-made skating rink in the world and, in summer, boaters re-live history as they travel the 47 hand-operated locks.

Summer events this year in Ottawa include Festival Canada July 1, the Central Canada Exhibition in August, the Colonel By Exhibition, the re-enactment of a pioneer council meeting in period costume and the dedication of Colonel By Valley between Parliament Hill and the Chateau Laurier Hotel, all in September.

ing countries were the main topics of discussion. A supplementary assistance program, in association with the International Monetary Fund, to give special aid to industrial countries in dire economic straits was one of the proposals made by the U.S. at the meeting. Any such aid would be subject to stringent conditions to ensure that the recipient country took action to restore its economic strength.

■ Federal Environment Minister Jean Marchand resigned from the Cabinet June 30 stating he did not support the Government's agreement with pilots and air-traffic controllers to appoint a third judge to what had been a two-member inquiry commission into safety aspects of air-traffic control in Quebec. The agreement also allows pilots and controllers approval rights to the commission report and a Parliamentary free vote on its acceptance or rejection. Mr. Marchand will remain as a private member for the Quebec city riding of Langelier.

■ The Manitoba provincial government signed an eight-year loan agreement last month for 75 million Swiss francs (just over $29 million in Canadian funds) at an annual interest rate of 7-and-three-eighths per cent.

■ Canada will contribute another $150,000 for humanitarian relief in Lebanon, announced Secretary of State for External Affairs Allan MacEachen, June 24. A donation of the same amount had been given previously by Canada to assist the International Red Cross in distributing food, medical supplies and services to victims of the civil strife in Lebanon.

■ A new proposal by Lockheed Aircraft Corporation to provide patrol aircraft for the Canadian Forces was discussed by Cabinet on June 29. National Defence Minister James Richardson stated that the proposal had several variations from the plan to buy 18 Orion planes in May, which fell through owing to financing problems. Lockheed, said Mr. Richardson, had now overcome the financing difficulty but he gave no indication when a Cabinet decision would be made on the new plan.

■ Israeli Foreign Minister Yigal Allon will visit Canada in the autumn at the invitation of Secretary of State for External Affairs Allan MacEachen, who on his Middle East tour in January, invited the Foreign Ministers of Egypt, Saudi Arabia, Jordan, Iraq and Israel to visit Canada.
