COMMUNICATIONS SATELLITES

Question No. 2,104—Mr. Robinson:

Will a system of communications satellites obviate the necessity of having cablevision and will the government consider the feasibility of providing sufficient communications satellites so that Canadians will not require cablevision to obtain TV viewing excellence?

[Translation]

Hon. Robert Stanbury (Minister of Communications): A system of communication satellites is not expected, in the near future, to obviate the necessity of having cablevision for those who wish to enjoy a variety of signals and who wish to avoid the use of an antenna. The government is engaged in research work in the communications satellite field, designed to take maximum advantage of what this new technology has to offer. It is expected that, in the course of time, broadcasting from satellites direct to homes will prove to be attractive in certain situations, perhaps first in the rural and remote areas and later in urban areas. A great deal more needs to be known about the costs before accurate predictions can be made.
