

most insensible to the intense severity of the winter's cold."

Formerly, the Lawrence was frozen over every winter, now several seasons intervene between the formation of the glacial bridge, or pont. The southern channel below the bay is never closed, but the north branch is annually congealed; which admits a direct carriage communication during about ten weeks, from the island of Orleans to Quebec.