

ILLUSTRATIONS

General Sarraïl, commanding the Allied armies in Greece, making his first landing in Salonika

Frontispiece

	FACING PAGE
President Poincaré on a visit to the front	18
“Of another house the roof only remained, from under it the rest of the building had been shot away” . .	48
The stone roof over this glass chandelier in the Arras cathedral was destroyed by shells, and the chan- delier not touched	50
General Franchet d’Espéray	70
King Constantine of Greece and commander-in-chief of her armies	102
“In Salonika the water-front belongs to everybody” .	122
“On one side of the quay, a moving-picture palace, . . . on the other a boat unloading fish”	124
Outside the Citadel, which is mediæval, Salonika is modern and Turkish	126
“The quay supplied every spy—German, Bulgarian, Turk, or Austrian—with an uninterrupted view”	138
“Hills bare of trees, from which the snow that ran down their slopes had turned the road into a sea of mud”	154