

anything but these two months to give, so we thought if we offered all we had it would maybe be worth while, even if it was n't much."

How about it, my friend? Have you offered your country all you have to give?

There are doubtless those who sometimes ask themselves, though they may deem it the part of wisdom not to ask others, "Even if the Germans were to win this war, what difference would it make anyway?" Well, just for the sake of argument, suppose that our European allies had been forced to sign a separate peace and that Germany, thus left free to give us her undivided attention, had landed an army on these shores (which she could do with comparatively little trouble, the mil-
