

Slowly the stars crept out above the hill,
Leaning to peer where their reflection lay
In the deep waters breathless now and still.
Then dusk came quietly with timid feet,
Bearing within her arms the veils of night . . .
The music altered to a quicker beat,
The dancer stood there swaying in the light.