

NO PLACE FOR LOVE

Authorities maintain that consumption is not an hereditary disease, but is universally admitted that the tendency to consumption is inherited. Many cases family characteristics, sooner or later the dread destroyer appears. Marriage among such people should not be permitted. The tendency toward consumption may be overcome in youth or early manhood and womanhood. Proper care, proper diet and proper exercise, together with Shiloh's Consumption Cure, will conquer the handicaps of heredity, and make anybody equal to the responsibilities and joys of life.

Nelson Gough, of Strathroy, Ont., sent the following letter to Druggist Stephenson, of Strathroy, and that gentleman has kindly forwarded it to the S. C. Wells Co., of Le Roy, N. Y.: "I want to tell you what the medicine, Shiloh's Cure, which I bought at your drug store, has done in three cases here. You know that I was long ill with lung trouble. The doctor thought I would not get well. I went out to your store and got a bottle of Shiloh's Consumption Cure. I never had anything to do me so much good. My lungs had been so weak that singing was impossible, and my head was so bad as to affect my memory. Shiloh's Consumption Cure cured me, and to-day I am a well man."

Shiloh's Consumption Cure is sold by all druggists under a positive guarantee that the purchase money will be refunded in case the medicine does not accomplish all that is claimed for it. 25c., 50c. and $1 a bottle throughout the United States and Canada. In England 1s. 2d., 2s. 3d. and 4s. 6d.

A FRIEND IN NEED

"Not Will you take that for an answer? I have tried hard to be excused, but you will accept from me no reason for staying at home, so you must take a plain refusal."

"It will be the last thing you will ever refuse me."

Charlie Thornton hastily quitted the breakfast room without another word or look for the lady who presided at the table, and who was wholly disconcerted by this unlooked-for proceeding on his part.

With flashing eyes she looked out of the window, saw her husband mount his horse, and dash madly away from her sight.

"I'll pay him for this in his own coin, on his return he will find me in the same mood as he left me."

Turning away from the window, her eyes caught those of her old friend, Miss Potter, fixed on her in surprise.

"What words are those you mutter so angrily, Sarah?" asked the elderly lady.

"I was saying I would pay that husband of mine for the exhibition of such temper; he never even said good morning as he left."

"Sarah, dear, were you not much more to blame than he for the manner of his leave-taking?"

"To blame for Charlie's abominable temper, Aunt Potter? How can you attach blame to me for his rudeness?"

A shower of tears was imminent, but Miss Potter, nothing daunted, kept on:

"My dear, does it not occur to you how severely you may have tried his temper by so persistently refusing to go to his father's—to this family reunion?"

"Yell, I don't care; why will he tease me to go to that old farm house to meet all those dreadful people?"

"You do not care? Do you really mean what you would imply?"

"I mean just what I say," Sarah replied, with slightly elevated brows.

"Nay, Sarah, if I believed you really knew the cruel meaning of those words, I should also know you had not one mite of unselfish love for the man you so fondly at times call husband, and the advice I am about to offer you would be worse than thrown away."

"Nonsense, auntie, it is not a question of love at all; but because I have a perfect horror of meeting all those country friends and relatives of his, and am bored to death by an incessant talk of 'stocks' and 'crops' I must need be accused of not loving my husband."

"Sarah, you must forgive me, but for the sake of your future happiness I must talk plainly to you. Shall I go on, darling?"

"My dearest auntie, you know you could say nothing of your wayward Sarah that could possibly require forgiveness. So pray go on; let me see the full extent of my natural wickedness."

"Sarah, when you married Charles Thornton, you knew his life was to be lived among his country friends, yet you seemed happy in your choice, and more than contented with the home in the country which he had spared no trouble or money to make as much like the old one in the city from which he had taken you. Once here, he welcomed any of your friends whom you choose to gather around you; nor does he leave you to the task of entertaining them, but makes himself such an agreeable host that your friends go back to the city thinking you the most enviable of women."

"Oh, I know he is just the dearest fellow in the world if he would only cease tormenting me about visiting here in the country."

"Wait, my dear, hear what I have to say of you. For all this love and kindness shown you by one of the most indulgent of husbands, you have made a most wretched return. For all he does for your happiness you have paid him with an utter, selfish indifference, and by such a course longer persisted in I tremble for the consequences. Sarah, your husband is but human; his forbearance will not last always; are you not afraid you may lose the priceless treasure of such a man's love?"

Sarah Thornton's face had undergone many changes while her friend had delivered, in such grave tones, her short speech, and when Miss Potter finished, and waited for an answer, she only looked up with a startled, pained look in her brown eyes, and the sweet childish lips trembled, but gave forth no sound. Liking this indication of her pent-up sorrow, the old lady talked long and earnestly, pointing out many errors, giving much advice where Sarah seemed so entirely ignorant, until she was fully awakened to a sense of wrong and remissness of duty and love.

"Oh, auntie, auntie! is this ugly picture of selfishness me, really your Sarah?" came at last in broken words as she lay sobbing in the arms of kind Miss Potter.

"Is this, dear, now do you forgive me for talking so plainly?"

"Do not speak of forgiveness, dearest friend, but show me the right way. Lead me until I am in the right path, that I may gain a stronger hold on the love which so slightly prized, so nearly lost."

"Willingly will I do all I can for you; but don't begin by bewailing the past; let that go, only serving as a lead to the bright picture of the future which you shall make by studying the happiness of your husband as closely as he watches over yours. Lay aside all thoughts of self; be sure Charlie will not forget your welfare. In time you will find pure joy in his pleasure; then ever you did in pleasing yourself."

"Thank you, dear aunt; you will see that I am going to profit by your advice; and with you always at hand to help me, I think it will be an easy task to do right. But I do wish it were already time for Charlie's return. Oh, dear! it is only 12 o'clock, and he will not be here until 5. I am so anxious to tell him that I want to go to Father Thornton's with him, to meet all who will receive me as a friend or relative for his sake."

"Now, dear, rather be glad you have so much time to prepare for his coming! Is there no little thing you can do for his comfort—nothing that you can do for him to assure him you thought of him in his absence? And when it is done, remember that Charlie likes you to dress expensively for him, even though you know no other company is coming. Run, run away and be ready; but be sure you are dressed in something he likes particularly, so that when he catches the first sight of you he may know all is peace and that Charlie Thornton's sight as, riding moodily up the bridge-path leading to his home on the afternoon of that day, he saw the small figure of his wife standing in the doorway, and looking some anxious, but in an eager, expectant look on her face. And Sarah, noting the listless, dejected air with which he threw himself from the saddle and came up the steps to her, felt a great twinge of remorse."

"Charlie, you are late. What has detained you?" she asked timidly.

"Nothing of importance. Have we company? I am sorry to have kept you waiting," said the husband, glancing at the pretty dinner table of his wife.

"No, Charlie, we have no company; but may I not have the kiss you ought to have given me this morning?" and Sarah looked up shyly.

"A dozen, my treasure, if you like. But how is this, Sarah? I expected to see frowns on this brow, and to speak and smile as if I loitered so long."

And he pressed a kiss on the low, broad forehead upturned to him.

"Oh, Charlie, you cannot even guess how sorry I am for past naughtiness! And instead of frowning, I intend to smile always," said Sarah playfully; but there was the sound of tears in the light words which caused Charlie to whirl her suddenly around to face him.

"See here, Sarah, what have you been doing to my little wife today?"

"Oh, Charlie, I have been taking her severely to task for her abominable selfishness, and laying out an entire new course for her in future."

"Selfishness, darling? I don't understand," began Charlie.

"Understand—I know you don't; it is impossible for one like you to guess at it. But you will soon know what a different person I mean to be in future."

"I do not want a different person in my wife, so pray do nothing rash."

And passing his arm around her waist he executed a dizzy waltz once around the room.

"I say, Charlie, be quiet! I want to ask you something," and he had already made up his mind to let her go for a visit of some weeks to the city.

"Wait you take me to father's on Thursday to meet all our friends, and I am usually assembled there on Christmas Day."

"Sarah, are you in earnest, and do you really wish to go?"

"I truly do, Charlie, and I feel sure of a day of real enjoyment."

"I am certain everything will be quite different from what you have always feared it; darling, only consent to know my mother and sisters, and you will never regret it. And father, too, he often talks of other things than 'stock' and 'crops'."

"Oh, Charlie, forgive me: I am sorry for such silly talk. I feel that I can never forgive myself for such utter foolishness."

And Sarah lay sobbing on his shoulder, where she had hidden her face at the mention of "crops and stock."

A most delightful day the next Thursday proved; and no one was happier than our little lady, who was in great danger of being as badly petted and spoiled by Charles's father and mother as ever she had been by himself.

And the two pretty young matrons who called her little sister looked so much like Charlie that her heart went out to them, and she felt sure of peace and love from them always. Before the day was half-spent she felt herself becoming interested in their stalwart husbands, and although they spoke of their crops to her she did not once feel like repenting it.

No, the pretty young matrons who called her little sister looked so much like Charlie that her heart went out to them, and she felt sure of peace and love from them always. Before the day was half-spent she felt herself becoming interested in their stalwart husbands, and although they spoke of their crops to her she did not once feel like repenting it.

"I knew her heart was right, and her head only needed setting—the pretty head her husband had nearly succeeded in turning by so much petting and spoiling. But, hoping much from her good common sense, I determined to save her from trouble, perhaps utter misery, in the future; for who can tell where such conduct might have led her to? I am glad I tried to save her."

And elderly Miss Potter nodded her head in satisfaction.

Nasty Skin Disease Permanently Cured.

B. B. B. is making medical history. No other remedy anywhere can produce such cases of "permanent cures" as are being published from time to time.

Even in the severest and most chronic diseases of the skin and blood, where other treatment has utterly failed, Burdock Blood Bitters makes cures so thorough and perfect that after many years there is no sign of the disease returning. We don't ask you to accept our statement that this is so. Here's proof from Mr. N. Mitchell, Carman, Man.

"During the winter of 1892-93 I was covered with pimples on the inside of my right leg, between the knee and ankle. As I never had anything of the kind before I was anxious about it, and sought medical advice, but getting no relief from the doctor, I tried a bottle of B. B. B., applying some of it to my leg, as well as using it internally, and to my surprise the nasty disease, whatever it was, disappeared within three weeks, and I am thankful to say it has never reappeared to this day."
