

port of entry to impose terms and conditions on the landing of an immigrant. No such change is proposed with respect to an immigration officer at an inland point under clause 14(4), a senior immigration officer under clause 23(1)(a), or an adjudicator under clause 32(3)(a). The proposed amendment would be unacceptable for this reason alone, if no distinction among the different situations was intended.

During committee stage we agreed to and accepted an amendment giving up the power to impose conditions specifying place of residence. We did this by accepting the amendment to add clause 115(4). For the purpose of ensuring the integrity of the selection system, we wish to retain the power to impose conditions related to the occupational selection factors. Conditions respecting the admission of fiancées and people requiring medical surveillance are also important. It must be remembered that the duration of conditions is only six months at the most, and that even within that short time they may be changed or cancelled for good cause.
