time without salt. We, on hearing this, determined to try the experiment. So we purchased a fine piece of steak, and after cutting it into pieces of the weight of two or three pounds, instead of applying to each piece was completely enveloped in corn meal, and packed with a sufficient quantity of meal between the pieces to prevent them coming immediately in contact with each other. In this condition it was permitted to remain till it was prepared for the table. On the sixth day after it was slaughtered, the last of it was served up, and pronounced by those who partook of it to be in every respect more delicious than it was the day we procured it. We state the above
