IMPERIAL POLITICS.

Gladstone Much Better-Chamberlain's

London, March 7 .- Right Hon. Mr. Gladstone was reported late this afternoon to be very much better. The official bulletins say nothing of his ailment except that he is suffering from hoarseness. There were a number of callers at the ex-premier's house to-day, among them Lord Rosebery and Mr. Asquith home secretary. Mr. Gladstone was to have been present at the dinner to be given this evening by the Duke of York, but Mrs. Gladstone this afternoon sent a letter of regret on behalf of her husband, adding that she would attend the dinner if the improvement in Mr. Gladstone's health continued.

Right Hon. Joseph Chamberlain, leader of the Liberal-Unionists in the house of commons, addressed a meeting of his constituents in Birmingham this evening. He maised Mr. Gladstone for his energy and courtesy in public life, and spoke in the warmest terms of his elequence and keenness in debate. None of the old premier's mental powers, he said, had shown signs of decay, and his retirelitical friends and foes alike. For his retirement there was no more reason now apparent than there had been at any time in the last ten years. Chamberlain said he had been asked repeatedly in the last few days whether the Liberal-Unionists were likely to become again a part of the great Liberal party. This question he was unable to answer. He had noticed a widespread impression that Lord Rosebery, the new, premier, was likely to reverse Mr. Gladstone's policy, notably as regarded home rule for Ireland. It certainly was curious that the Liberal party, after their great struggle for home rule, should now accept a leader who was known to be lukewarm in their cause and reject one who was recognized as a zealot for sepelements in the present political situation. The uncertainty could not be fathomed for some time, and parties must wait and watch. The Liberal-Unionists must observe the course of events. Without doubt, the future would remain unchanged; home rule would still be part of the Liberal programme, and consequently he and his colleagues must continue their strenuous opposition to the government. After, leaving Mr. Gladstone this evening Dr. Bond stated that his patient was suffering from inflammation of the throat and a troublesome cough. He remained cheerful, Dr. Bond said, and had a good appetite. Mrs. Gladstone attended the dinner given by the Duke of

The News says that the object of Justin McCarthy, leader of the auti-Parnellites, in calling on Mr. Gladstone on Monday was to offer him an address or some other compliment as a mark of Irish gratitude. Mr. Gladstone deprecated anything appearing to give him alone credit for the programme of the Liberal party. He expressed most cordaily his appreciation of the loyalty of the frish members since they had been allied to the Liberals, dating the alliance from the day of Charles Stuart Parnell's speech on the first home rule bill. Mr. Gladstone referred only directly during Mr. McCarthy's call to the present situation. He intimated that he expected his sucessor would carry out his policy without change. He would not have retained office so long, had he not felt such a deep interest in the cause of Ireland. Mr. McCarthy says that Mr. Gladstone apparently was in high spirits. He was brimful of anecdotes of his long parliamentary career, and related many reminniscences of the struggle for home
