Price, the next best man, do seem disposed to look at the matter in a favorable light. It costs quite a little to go to the big Canadian city for a week or so and to train there, and the little up-riverite feels he cannot afford the expense. Price certainly has the speed, not only in the turns but in the stretches, and in that regard has somewhat of an advantage over Parker, who has used himself to inside work only.

However, it is a long while yet be-fore February 4th, and before that the speeding game may be so warm here that friends of Price, or perhaps others, may see that this city is to the front in the big series. The upper Canadian fiyers are not the "whole thing" as down-easters are so apt to imagine; they have no special license to win everything in sight; neither have border to carry off our prizes.
