ALFRED AUSTIN

WRITES A POEM ON "MOZART'S GRAVE."

NEW YORK, April 14.—The poet laureate of England Alfred Austin has written the following poem on "Mozart's Grave" for the New York "Independent" which is about to appear. The poem has not appeared in England and is thus given its first publication in America:

Where lies Mozart? Tradition shows, A likely spot, So much, no more. No words of his own time disclose, Where crossed he to the further shore, Tho' later ages, roused to shame, On tardy tomb have carved his name.

"This common grave to all is free,
"And for one more is room with.
"It fills the fosse. Now tread it down.
With pauper, lunatic and clown."

Yet had he wizarded with sound, | Blectors, cardinals and kings, While there welled forth from source profound,
The flow of silvery sounding springs.
Music of tenderness and mirth,
One with his very soul at birth.
And they? Where are they now?

The bust
The elaborately carved tomb,
Whose scrolls begrimed by age and dust,
None care to stoop and scan for whom,
Are all remaining to express
Their monumental nothingness.

Miter and coronet, and crown,
Gaze into space that heed them not,
Unmeaning pomp of dead renown,
Medley of monarchs long forgot,
Who from the nation's ghastly strife,
Won immortality for life.
Once, on Nile's bank an artist raised,
A temple at the king's command,
And on it name august emblazed.
But when a flood submerged the land,
The name was washed away, and lo!
The artist was inscribed below.

Thus vanished ostentatious lives;
But thru all time, beloved Mozart,
Your magic memory survives,
Part of the universal heart;
In joy a sympathetic strain,
In sorrow soother of our pain.

MAKING GOOD PROGRESS

SYDNEY, N. S., April 15.—F. W. Warren and C. M. Odell, of the Dominion Coal Co., left this morning for Doion Coal Co., left this morning for Dominion No. 12 on a tour of inspection.

Mr. Odell stated that very rapid progress was being made at that colliery.

It is possible that the branch railway connecting the mine with the Sydney and Louisburg main line will be completed on August first, and that the first coal wil be shipped on the following day.

Rev. Charles L. Page Warns Against the Pitfalls of Early Married Life.

Rev. Charles L. Page continued his noon talks on matrimony at the Dud-ley Street Baptist church, Boston, re-cently, and took the Honeymoon for cently, and took the Honeymoon for his special subject. He said in part: "If there is a vacation, a trip—by no means a necessity—let it be in part, at least, among the quiet hills of earth, where are long visions of God's creation. Too much sightseeing, too much going here and there, will bring wear-going here and there, will bring wearing wearisomeness.

"Should the rays of the honeymoon be enjoyed in the house or suite where the new home is to be made, the foundations of earth's heaven may be splendidly laid and cemented with the warmth of love, to invincible stability.
While it will be learned that life needs
comething more than angel cake and something more than angel cake and that housekeeping is not an automatic arrangement set in motion by the alarm clock; the husband may find as much joy, if he begins right, in bring coal as he did before time in buying coal as he did before time in buy-ing candy; the bride may, if she has the true womanly instincts, make the early trials of housekeeping serve life's joy as do the minor chords the choicest

'The honeymoon is the time to begin seek from the other help in pleasing and conforming to each other's ideals. It is not that there should be a coming to agree in everything but a discovering of how to differ without discon-

upon those things which weld two souls in unbroken unity, must be specially guarded against. Beware lest the bird alkes away your expressions of endear-nent. A wife's ears long more and nore for wooing words as well as deeds onsistent. Let there be no diminution or any lacks or failures in any way on the part of your bride.

"That, charming bird, the honeyguide, who in his native place has the habit of leading people to places where bees have stored their honey, should be suggestive of the need of following every lead to things which insure the happiness which will outlive the honeymoon. The guide to ever-increasing unselfishness should be closely followed. Selfishnes inflicts deep wounds in love. Let every man seek guidance to home carefulness and order, which, if a woman loves neatness and good house-
