DASTARDLY ATTEMPT TO BLOW UP MINE AT BRIDGEPORT, C. B.

GLACE BAY, N. S., July 9.—A dastardly attempt was made to blow up No. 8 mine at Bridgeport on Thursday. A bomb was constructed and placed in the mine, consisting of twelve pounds of powder, covered carefully with stones and rubbish, to which a squib was attached. About eight o'clock Thursday morning Rory McPherson, who does guard duty underground, saw a man crouching suspiciously about 400 feet from the pit bottom, between the travelling and haulage roads. He started to investigate the man's actions, but when the would-be destroyer of human life saw him approaching he made a dash for the travelling road.

McPherson Follows

McPherson followed for a short distance, but finally lost trace of the man. He then returned to the spot where he saw the man first. After a short search he discovered the powder and attached to it was one of the squibs which are in use in the mine for shooting down the coal.

It was quite evident that the man did not have time to finish his dastardly work before he was discovered by McPherson. Had the culprit not been discovered at his nefarious work at the time he was the powder should have undoubtedly been set off and an explosion occurred which would have carried death and destruction to all in the mine. As there were nearly 30 men employed in the mine yesterday the results are too horrible to contemplate, as the explosion of the gases in the mine would have destroyed every living thing underground.

Detectives are at work on the case and are following a clue which may result in an arrest. It is believed that the man who did the nefarious deed went down with the men in the morning and thus got into the mine without arousing suspicion. Notwithstanding the many threats that have been made by strikers, it is not believed that any miner would be guilty of the crime of attempting to send without warning into another world two hundred or so of his fellow-workmen. The bomb was discovered early Thursday morning, but the find was kept a secret in the hope of discovering the perpetrator.

COLORS FOR TERRITORIALS.

The King Presides at Interesting Ceremony in London.

(London Standard.)

Amid scenes of impressive brilliance, His Majesty the King presented colors to 110 Territorial units on Saturday. The presentation took place on the East Lawn of Windsor Castle, and the King, who wore the uniform of a field-marshal, was accompanied by Her Majesty the Queen, their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales, the Duke of Connaught, Princess Mary of Wales. Perfect weather continued throughout the ceremony, which was witnessed by a large number of foreign officers and the delegates of the Imperial Press Conference.

There is a gaunt beauty in Windsor Castle that those who see it across lush meadows in its setting of green cannot but appreciate. Nearer at hand there is a mild, tragic bleakness in the grey pile, an over-shadowing of the building that overlooks the East Lawn, for which all the softness of its parklands cannot atone. On Saturday the lawn was aglitter with brilliant uniforms and polished equipment, for all that was greatest in the world of military achievement was gathered to witness a unique ceremony. On three sides of a hollow square were grouped the color parties of 110 units of the Territorial Army, and with each, carried in their polished leather covers, were the colors which they were shortly to receive back at the hands of the King.

There were Yeomanry dragons, all gallantly accoutred in silver and blue, Yeomanry in scarlet and silver, Yeomanry in green and red. There were smart infantry units in characteristic scarlet with facings of buff, and facings of green, and facing of royal blue. There were Highland units, a goodly sight, and Irish corps more sombrely uniformed, and representatives of regiments which sported the dirty khaki of service dress.

At one end of the square the bands of the Brigade of Guards were massed, and running up from there, in four rigid lines, the non-commissioned officers of the Guards, whose duty it was to "nurse" the colors into the King presented them. The wide stretch of lawn blazed with the many hues of two hundred battle flags—crimson and royal blue, buff and green, with a deeper, richer tinge of claret in the guidons and a dash of lemon yellow in the regimental flags of the Scottish regiments.

At a word of command from Colonel Bingham the non-commissioned officers turned outward and marched to the centre of the square. Here they stood waiting, like upon line of drooping flags. Upon the overlooking terrace a crowd of silk-hatted spectators had gathered. There were the Empire Press delegates. In a space below them were the high officers of the army and the foreign officers. French chasseurs, Italian officers, Russians with their distinctive flat-topped hats and wrinkled riding boots, Japanese in dark blue and yellow, and a host of others, all in uniform, stood in their order, facing the King. They thus formed a capital T, the top bar of which represents the men with the flags, stretching left and right of His Majesty, and the upright the color parties.

As fast as one party turned and marched another took its place. The King's hand was outstretched, the Guards' non-commissioned officers, who had filled the centre, had withdrawn, their duty done, the centre ceremony. The line of flags moved slowly along till it was exhausted, and then the line on the right hand side of the King moved forward.

At last the final color was bestowed. The square was now clear, for the bands had drawn back, and the Guards' non-commissioned officers, who had filled the centre, had withdrawn, their duty done, the centre ceremony. The line of flags moved slowly along till it was exhausted, and then the line on the right hand side of the King moved forward.

As the hands thundered forth the National Anthem the King came out from the pavilion alone, erect, soldierly, kindly, his hand raised to his plumed hat in acknowledgment of the salute.

"Spoke arms; order arms," commanded Lord Bingham; then "Remove your head-dresses." In an instant the soldiers were bareheaded.
"Three cheers for the King!" With a roar that came, echoing back from the castle, the invitation was accepted. Three times the cheer arose, a great volume of sound. The band broke into a march, and unit by unit, defiled away, leaving His Majesty to receive the lieutenants of the counties.

ahead of the royal company, stood with his hands resting on his sword, and his head bent. Then Bishop Taylor Smith, raising his hands toward the flag, pronounced the solemn dedication:

"In the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost, we do dedicate and set apart these colors that they may be a sign of our duty towards our King and country, in the sight of God Amen."

Then followed the actual presentation of the colors, and seldom indeed has there been witnessed a more perfectly organized or better managed function. The non-commissioned officers, who bore the flags, turned out in perfect order, and in perfect silence, two straight lines parallel with the royal pavilion. Then the color parties formed up one behind the other in their order, facing the King. They thus formed a capital T, the top bar of which represents the men with the flags, stretching left and right of His Majesty, and the upright the color parties.

"Forasmuch as men at all times have made for themselves signs and emblems of their allegiance to their rulers, and of their duty to uphold those laws and institutions which God's providence has called them to obey, we, following this natural and pious custom, and remembering that God Himself led His people Israel by a pillar of fire by night and a pillar of cloud by day, are met together before God to ask His blessing on these colors, which are to represent to us our duty towards our sovereign and our country. Let us, therefore, pray Almighty God of His mercy to grant that they may never be unfurled save in the cause of justice and righteousness, and that He may make them to be to those who follow them a sign of His presence with them in all dangers and distresses, and may increase their faith and hope in Him, who is the King of Kings and Lord of Lords."
