He was very much interested. Would say and do what he could to get people to act. Described how our brethren in the United States; one agent looks after the several interests and the societies divide the funds. We should bring these things near, death will bring them near to us, and then we will feel differently.

Professor Foster said :

He had been interested with the remarks, as well as report. The Missionary work is divided into two parts,—away, at home,—one cannot succeed without the other. The farmer cannot reap without tillage. If we are careful to analyze an action, will find there is a certain degree of selfishness. If I invite a man to dine with me, I naturally expect some advantage in return. If we work for the heathen far away, it is a higher degree of benevolence; so upon humanitarian grounds we should engage in this noble work. Christ a glorious example, no selfishness in the price he gave. We may sympathize with the lowest, most fallen, if like him. We should aim to qualify the native workers in heathen lands, as they can better perform the work and at far less cost.

Rev. J. Mariner said :

When he last saw Brother J. L. Phillips, and bid him farewell, as he might not see him again before sailing for India, Brother Phillips said: "Go to the Yearly Meeting in Nova Scotia, do all you can to encourage the Foreign Mission work." Four hundred years ago not a gospel sermon had been preached on this continent. At the time of those great fires that have consumed a large part of some cities within a few years, how anxious the people were to send help; shall we not send help to the perishing heathen? The next great speech you are to make is the collection. You can give as large a speech as you are a mind to.

The collection was then taken, amounting to $11.32, (eleven dollars and thirty-two cents.)

Benediction by the President.
