Ilving with his wife and children in Jer sey City, N. Y., committed suicide under peculiar circumstances list week. He called one of his little ones to him and gave her a note to carry to her mother, down stairs. The note contained the information that before it would be delivered the world. The child had scarcely left the room before a pistol shot was heard. Mrs. Dillare ran to the room and found her husband dead and bleeding profusely from a wound in the head. No cause has been assigned for the act.

Will be sold very low at James, his senior, had already gone there Hay, Oats, Feed, &c., James, his senior, had already gone there and was an apprentice to a printer. John entered a printing office, not as a regular apprentice, but under engagement to remain until he was twenty. Both brothers soon became accomplished workmen. James, at ally young man, with workmen. James, at ally young man, with men compositor and accurate proof-reader. James was no sooner out of his time than he prepared to set up in business. John's engagement expired at about the same time; and the two brothers, in 1816, earlier he name of J. & J. Harper. They were perfect masters of their art; and it soon came to be understood that if any-body wanted a job done quickly and well in the young Harpers were the men to do it. The business grew, and in 1825 it they established themselves in Cliff st., upon the ground now covered by a part of their establishment. Before this they had begun to get up books upon their own account. Their method was one still practised in England. They would print a book, and then go around among the leading book sellers and sell to each as many copies as he would take. The two younger brothers. Wesley and Fletcher, had been joined to them, and, not long after serving their time, were admitted as partners, the firm name shortly after being changed to that of Harper & Brothers? The answer is either of us is Harper, and all the rest are the Brothers. John Harper was a man of great decision of character. He made up his mind quickly and was slow to change. He was always master of hipself and his business. No man ever saw him in a hurry; no man ever saw him discourteous. Perfectly honorable himself, he was slow to suspect o hers of dishonor. He clung to men whom he had known; and men who known him clung to him. There is not, probably, in the country another business establishment in which there are so many persons who have remained so long a time.
