kept for power purposes and a large proportion of the remainder for maintaining the supply. The investment per actual horsepower is greatly reduced by the substitution of mechanical for animal power, and the cost of operation compares favorably with that of horses. The horse, however, remains the best prime mover for all-round purposes, and will probably never be entirely displaced by a machine. The comparative merits of animal and mechanical power will in the end probably be resolved into a question as to which source of power will require the least acreage for the production of fuel, owing to the rapidly growing area required to supply food for the human race.

Last but not least, the automobile is rapidly finding a place in the business management of the farm. It takes from the shoulders of the heavy draft horse the necessity for long, exhausting trips to town on light errands. It dispenses with the one or more horses often kept simply for occasional use on the road, and leaves to the general purpose draft horse only that work to which he is well adapted, namely, the drawing of implements over the field and the hauling of heavy loads to market.

In general machinery has reduced the cost of producing farm products. It has improved the quality of products by condensing crop operations within the period when the most favorable conditions prevail. By increasing the acre effectiveness of a man it has reduced the labor necessary to produce the nation's food supply, leaving it free to assist in development along other lines. At the same time it has thrown upon the cities the burden of providing work for an ever-increasing army of non-producers. It has increased the qualifications demanded of the farm laborer so the unskilled city laborer will not do on the farm. It has increased the investment necessary for the proper organization of a farm, this and the higher price of land making it more difficult for a person of small capital to engage in farming. As a nation we have occupied nearly all of our naturally productive area and are confronted with the prospect of providing food for an increasing population with a constant acreage. In the past machinery has encouraged extensive rather than intensive farming. Henceforth the reverse should be true. If he who makes two blades of grass grow where one grew before is a public benefactor, then none the less a public servant is he who puts into the farmer's hands the machinery for making such a course attractive. On the other hand, if he is a public curse who reduces the fertility of the soil so that but one ear of corn grows where two grew before, at least a small part of the blame should fall upon the shoulders of the manufacturer who furnishes the means for pursuing such a course and reaping a profit.
