The Chairman said they had done well to accord to Mr. Gough the hearty welcome which had just been given him. They were truly glad to see him back again among them. He had come in edge off both mind and body, and to reter's campaign, and he thought that which is relatively their perfection of time to render good service in the win they would find that he was perfectly work. prepared to do his work. There were causes for great encouragement at the present time in the work in which he was engaged. He thought they ought to be glad to find that the public conscience had been greatly weakened on this subject. Good society was alarmed at the condition of the lower classes, as the result of intemperance, but let him 'tell "good society" that they had to look to themselves as well as to look to the working men. With regard to the children, he could tell them that the principle of total abstinence was enforced by lecturers who were allowed freely to meet the children, and he could answer for the next generation being fully instructed in this subject. (Hear, hear.) Mr. Gough then eame forward and was again much cheered. After thanking them for the kind reception they had accorded to him, which, he remarked, had almost overwhelmed him, h said that it was now twenty-five years ago that he first spoke to a British audience in Exeter Hall. He came to advocate the cause of temperance then, and he came to advocate it now. It was the same old theme, and there was nothing new or fresh that could be advanced concerning ,it. In the short space of time allotted to that evening's address he must confine himself to one or two points. First, he wished to define his position. He presumed they were all ready to agree with him that drunkenness was an evil, and that it was their duty to do all they could to remove an evil. On these two facts they base their operations, and the difference, if there was any, between them and him, was not with regard to the evil, but with regard to the method of removing it. He held that the principle of total abstinence was a lawful principle. Alcohol was not required even as ocean. a medicine, He was 51 years of age, and he had delivered 7,681 speeches, and travelled 14 820 miles, and had not been in bed a day since 1846, all on cold water, without the aid of a stimulant. And yet some doctors prescribed alcohol. But he was not there to deal with the medical question. It had been remarked that the Bible was against it, this ground- But is it not also the but he said no. It was said that they had not a command. He replied that they did not want one. PROGRESS IN ENGLAND. In England, where 'the theory and practice of total abstinence have always been scoffed at by the cultivated majority, the awful prevalence of drunken. ness is leading to the formation of a public sentiment against drinking as strong as any that ever existed in this maintained drinking practices, but now many of the ministers of the Established, as well as the Dissenting bodies, with a large section of the medical profession and distinguished men from every walk in life have united in a vigorous movement for the suppression of drunkenness. Cannon Farrar- in a sermon preached a few Sundays since in Westminster Abbey, " declared alcohol drinking and drunkenness to be the one glaring disgraceful and perilous/national vice' by which the nation stands unenviably distinguished and seriously endangered. So strong a feeling of the evils of drunkenness as that which now prevails in respectable circles in England naturally leads to the adoption of the Christian rule of total abstinence. It does not require the imposition of total abstinence upon others as a rule; it only leads a man to say : " Because this evil is so great, and because I wish to save those who are ruining themselves by drink, and because I cannot very effectively urge them to abstain without abstaining myself, I, therefore, relinguish a luxury to which I deem myself entitled, that I may the more successfully persuade those to abandon it to whom it is proving a curse." It begins to be evident in Englandthat this source of conduct is something very different from fanaticism, and the same truth ought to be equally evident on this side of the THE TEMPERANCE OF THE BI BLE 1S TOTAL ABSTINENCE. BY W. HARPER. Total abstinence is by nearly all tem-
