ITEM OF HISTORY.

How Frederick the Great of Prussia Came to Institute

The Order of the Black Eagle—Lewis Morrison is the Possessor of a Badge.

On the bill-boards and in the store windows this week, a peculiar lithograph is displayed, advertising the coming production of "Frederick the Great," by Lewis Morrison. It is a reproduction of the "Order of the Black Eagle," the famous Knighthood of Germany, which had an origin of most intense interest. Frederick the First, of Prussia, was a man of peculiar temperament, a conservative and autocratic personage, who absorbed associating with the democratic or plebeian classes, and whose firm belief was, that he was ordained by God, not man, to rule his people, and therefore was superior to them. He was dissatisfied with his environment and his constant coming in contact with the common herd, as he called his people, that to exclude all others from his immediate association, he founded the "Order of the Black Eagle" in 1701, the knighthood to consist of old thirty men, exclusive of princes of royal blood, who were in virtue thereof entitled to knighthood. The thirty were of unquestionable nobility and from the direct line of royal ancestry. Fifty ducats was paid by every new member, which went to the support of the orphan asylum of Königsberg, and he then received gratis his insignia of office, which consisted of an elaborate regalia and a badge worn suspended from the collar with a yellow ribbon, or displayed upon the left breast of the uniform. This order was the highest in Prussia at that time and worn only by those who were in direct connection with the sovereign, and who could not travel twenty German miles from His Majesty's presence without royal permission. Lewis Morrison is the happy possessor of one of these badges, obtained by him when in Berlin a few years ago, and the lithograph referred to has been made from it.

PULPIT SENSATIONALISM.

A Correspondent on the Subjects of Girls and Governments.

The worthy pastor of the First Presbyterian Church is somewhat exasperated on account of the sensationalism of certain pulpits, and not without some reason. The overflowing crowd to hear told over a Gospel pulpit on a Sabbath evening what the boys say about the boys is surely suggestive. Has the Gospel lost its ancient power? Has the preacher found it insufficiently attractive? Or has he discovered a sensational taste to which he is resolved to cater? The original Baptist did not require to tell the people of "Judea and beyond Jordan" that he would preach about the girls in order to find a satisfactory audience.

His preaching was along a very different line from that announced by his successor in this city for last Sunday evening. I imagine I hear John the Baptist reading over his pulpit a number of faults which the girls found in the boys. He had more serious business on hand. He did not find it necessary to resort to such tactics. It is to be hoped, however, that some good results will follow the extensive correspondence of the young pastor with so many of the young ladies, and that the creatures who were so gently and religiously approached for information. Let our good brother of the First Presbyterian Church wait and listen with his ears to the ground for results and let us all hope for the best.

As to the Government, we may say, that if a preacher finds it necessary to preach in order to defend British institutions, "who daur meddle with him?" Maybe the sermon was necessary. Maybe it was just what John Knox would have preached about on such occasion. Other pulpits have been firing lyddite at the Biers in Chatham. Of course the range was so great that the Biers did not receive much punishment, nevertheless they were fired at with intent.

The pulpits will get right after a while, and there will be no stampeding when bombshells of Gospel truth drop in our midst, and our orchestras "will sing unto the Lord a new song," and our people will get rid of "itching ears," and Zion shall arise and shake herself from the dust of sensualism and put on her beautiful garments and men will be glad to go up to the House of the Lord for worship.

Yours, etc.,
"REXELON."
