"Pepe" Lulla is a familiar name in New Orleans, yet one which became tra-ditional during the life time of its posses-"Pepe" was a popular designation, the real name of the old man was Jose Lulla, to which he had the proud privflege of affixing the knightly Don through the grace of Don Francisco Serrano, re-gent of Spain, from whom twenty years ago he, an American citizen, received the golden cross of the order of Charles III for such stout championship of his native Spain as sent his name from New Orleans, ringing with praises into the loyal circles of Havana and far Madvid Twas that episode suade his fame international, but it is but a single incident in the his tory of a life full of the most desperate and romat-tic adventure. He was past 70 years the other day, and he led a somewhat secluded life down in the old Third district, away part of the town, but to the last he was full of vitali-

He was born in the island of Minorca, and elaimed to have Moorish as well as Spanish blood in his velns. He took to the sea early in life as cabin bey for an American master, John Conkling, of Bal American master, John Conking, of Baitimore. He settled in New Orleans, and was first employed as "bouncer" in a ballroom and cafe of old Creole days. Soon after he took this position the cafe became known as one of the most orderly in the city. Next, "Pepe" became a patron and then a master of the fencing schools, and tree a master of the fencing schools, and may well be spoken of as the last of the New Orleans fencing masters. Long before the war "Pepe" was known as the most expert master of arms in America. With saber, broadsword, rapler or small sword he was invulnerable, and with fire-arms he had few equals. With the pistol he would shoot dollars from between the fingers of his friends and pipes from be tween their teeth.

His son, from whose head "Pepe" often shot oranges in imitation of William Tell, was a graduate of West Point, and his picture hangs upon the walls of "Pepe's" former residence in New Orleans, among the many souvenirs of his adventurous, but none the less financially prosperous, life. His energetic nature led him into many speculations and his fortune was estimated at several hundred thousand dollars. Among his possessions was Grands Terre, an island in Barataria bay, upon which Fort Livingston is situated.

Of the twenty or more challenges which "Pepe" received and half that number of actual duels which have followed, only two men met death at his hand, and of the two fatal encounters one was undertaken while acting in the ca-pacity of a second to a friend, and may be said to have been forced upon him. The g second was a German fencing who, on the field, declared his

The other fatal occasion followed upon the episode which made Pepe famous and secured him his Spanish knighthood and Indeed, the only personal tain, in which position he served secured him his Spanish knighthood and decoration. Indeed, the only personal difficulties which Pepe has had since the war were the result of his espousal of the Spanish cause. He early became an American citizen, and took that view of his citizenship which induced him to remain loyal to the Union during the war, but he retained the warmest affection for his native Spain, and even as early as his native Spain, and even as early as | We w 1858, in the excitement in New Orleans following the Lopez filibustering expedition, became, by his brave defense of Spanish residents, the object of such hatred by the Cubans as subjected him to many attempts at assassination. The many attempts at assassination. The anti-Spanish excitement broke out again in New Orleans in 1869, and during this period he challenged a Cuban who had been guilty of a petty outrage upon a defenseless Spaniard. The man declined to fight, and Perse posted him as to fight, and Pepe posted him as a coward. His indignation being thoroughly aroused he issued French, English and Spanish posters and placed them conspicuously all over the city, challenging Cubans and fillbusters everywhere to most a combat. Onite a number both mortal combat. Quite a number, both in New Orleans and in the West Indies, accepted at first, and many crossed the Gulf to face the defiant champion of Spanish loyalty, for the unparaleled bold ness of the old man spread like wildfire throughout the Spanish world. But one after another of those who hastened to respond weakened when they learned of 'Pepe's' wonderful skill with arms and launtless courage. Some changed their purpose of open fight to midnight assassination; others, to escape the dangerous contest with semblance of honor, resorted to those jockeying tactics with which "Pepe" had already become familiar before the war, and which had so much to do with bringing dueling into disrepute among southern gentlemen. At last one truly brave man was found in the person of an Austrian officer, a soldier of fortune who had espoused the cause of the Cuban revolutionists. Like "Pepe" he was an accomplished swordsman, but pistois were chosen to most nearly equalize the antagonists. were chosen to most nearly equalize the antagonists.

The conditions were, distance thirty paces, fire and advance. When the word was given "Pepe" remained motionless, with his face turned away from the Austrian who, reserving his fire, advanced with steady determination. He raised his arm to fire when he had reached. raised his arm to fire when he had reached raised his arm to fire when he had reached a point near enough, as he thought, to ensure his aim. Upon the instant Pepe wheeled about, and firing quick as thought his ball transpiemed the Austrian. It was some months before the wounded man died, but his fate effectually deterred others from facing Pepe in the cause of Cuba. He was long the object of attempts at assessingtion.

Paez continued to serve his country for twenty years at intervals. He was in command at a famous action between the revolutionary forces and Lopez, at which Lopez was defeated. He was then made a brigadier general and put in command of the revolutionary forces. From this time he continued to achieve victories, and at times co-operated with Bolivar.
Venezuela and New Granada united in one republic called Columbia, and the final overthrow of the authority of Spain occurred at the battle of Carababo, under occurred at the battle of Carababo, under the combined forces of Bolivar and Paez, aided by European auxiliaries. In this engagement Paez, taking a by path un-known to his enemies, succeeded in turn-ing their right flank, and routing the Spanish army. As a reward for his ser-vices he was made general-in-chief. The struggle went on until 1830, when Venezuela became an independent repub-lic, and the following year Paez was Venezuela became an independent republic, and the following year Paez was elected its president. In 1839 he was reelected. So successful was he in effecting prosperity and reform that his countrymen again, in 1843, implored him to accept another election. He declined and threw his influence in favor of Jose T. Monagnas, hoping that the ambition of that turbulent conspirator would be thus Monagnas, hoping that the ambition of that turbuleut conspirator would be thus satisfied. In this Paez was disappointed. Monagnas coerced the house of representatives into illegal measures. Paez was called in, but Monagnas proved too strong, and the liberator of Venezuela was taken prisoner and sentenced to perpetual exile. After months passed in jail he was taken on board a steamer and conveyed to New York, reaching there in 1850. In 1858 he was recalled, but remained in Venezuela only six months. mained in Venezuela only six months, being induced to quit the country by the petty jealousies of different leaders. Once more, when De Castro was deposed, he was recalled, and this time remained in Venezuela three years. During this time he assumed, by request, dictatorial powers, which seemed the only way to bring about a quiet. But the people were too turbulent, and, despairing of being able to effect any good, Paez again left for New York, where he resided to the date of his death.
