Our Herring Industry Doomed?

(Western Star.)

Now appears the herring fishery season will have an early termination. Only a few vessels have been out this season, notwithstanding the fact that the new United States tariff enjoyed by bottoms that country operating here under the new tariff is a great advantage. It is therefore up to us to seek new markets for our herring or new means of cure, otherwise our people will be compelled to seek other avenues of endeavour. It has been said that if there was no Scotch pack, fleets of United States vessels would come here for salt bulk. Possibly so, and we will be glad to see them, for we will remember the busy scenes of the herring fishery more profitable we see a great industry of over half a million dollars annually, doomed. The United States is endeavouring to develop her own fisheries. Many of her fish distributors have vested interests in her Alaskan herring fishery, which industry her new tariff is hoped to foster. What matters it to them that the Alaskan herrings compare very unfavourably to those of Newfoundland, they are American product and therefore should be utilized by Americans in preference to the foreign article; this is a part of America's policy. And who can blame them?

It is therefore up to us to seek new markets for our herring or new means of cure, otherwise our people will be compelled to seek other avenues of endeavour. It has been said that if there was no Scotch pack, fleets of United States vessels would come here for salt bulk. Possibly so, and we will be glad to see them, for we will remember the busy scenes of twenty years ago, when upwards of thirty and forty sail of vessels came here and took away from one to two and sometimes three cargoes of herring in a season. But will we get a return of these days? We doubt it, because even before the introduction of the Scotch pack, there was some noticeable falling off in the fleet. And suppose we return to these favourable conditions, would the financial returns be as great as with the Scotch pack? Eighty-five thousand barrels of herring constituted a good fall's shipment by salt bulk. At $1.25 a barrel this would amount to $106,250. Last fall some twenty-five thousand barrels were packed by the Scotch method and placing these at $1.25 a barrel, which is $2 less than they sold for here, gives a return of $250,000, being over double the amount three and a half times that quantity would fetch by the salt bulk method. It has been charged that the fishermen drove the salt bulkers away by means of the big price they demanded for the fish. But was herring the only thing that soared in price? What of nets, rope, gasoline, engines, etc. Did not the prices of these articles double and triple? In some instances exceeded even beyond that? Compare the cost of outfitting a boat for the herring fishery the past five years as to that of twenty years ago, and then compare the price of herring to-day to what it was then. Possibly during the war period the price paid for herring from the nets became abnormal, but that condition has since passed away, and the past two years salt bulkers have been able to purchase herring at within 25 cents a barrel of pre-war years. We would like to see the vessels here and we would like to see the packing stations in full swing also.

So far as we can gather, however, there is another and greater cause for the falling off in the herring industry. There is a lessened demand for the fish in the markets of the United States, and this condition has
